The Exploration of the La Plata and its Tributaries.

REPORT OF LIEUT. PAGE, OF THE "WATER WITCH" EXPEDITION, TO THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Dec. 2.

The report on the late exploration and survey of the river La Plata and its tributaries, by Lieut. PAGE, Commander of the Water Witch, is a highly interesting document, and contributes not a little to Geographical science. It is altogether too voluminous for publication in the Times, especially as many particulars of the expedition have already appeared in your journal; but a brief synopsis of its contents may not be uninteresting to your readers at the present time.

The Water Witch sailed from New-York in February, 1855. Having arrived at the Junction in April following, Lieut. PAGE, through the U. S. Legation there, communicated to the Brazilian Government the object of the expedition, and obtained permission and facilities for carrying his explorations as far as Alboquerque, on the river Paraguay. Beyond this point it seems, he was not allowed to proceed; but subsequently the prohibition was removed. From Rio, the Water Witch went to Buenos Ayres, where she was unavoidably detained for some time, and served as a man-of-war for the protection of United States citizens until the then pending difficulties were settled by the abandonment of the siege by the forces of the Argentine Confederation under General URQUIZA.

The principal affluents of the River La Plata, the Parana, the Uruguay and their tributaries, were the field of Lieutenant PAGE's operations, and his researches are of considerable value both to the commercial and scientific world. A few miles below the spot where the Parana and Uruguay meet and form the River La Plata is the Island of Martin Garcia, once considered of great importance from its commanding military position, but now that importance is greatly diminished by the discovery of a hitherto unknown channel, deeper than the old channel, and whose course forms the boundary between the foreign States of Buenos Ayres and the Banda Oriental. The Island, by this discovery, has lost the political character it has maintained, of commanding the channels both of the Uruguay and Parana.

This was the initial point of the explorations. It was followed by an expedition up the Parana, which river was ascended about 300 miles from Buenos Ayres to its confluence with the Paraguay; and, from this point, the Paraguay was further ascended about 300 miles, to the Brazilian military post called Corumba, beyond which the advance of the Water Witch was at that time prohibited. The exploration of certain tributaries of the Parana was also subsequently prohibited by the Paraguay Government—an unwarrantable assumption of authority—as it only held jurisdiction over those waters conjointly with the Argentine Confederation, which fully authorized the expedition. Lieut. PAGE, with a brief allusion, passes over the episode that occurred about this time, when he found it necessary to interfere for the protection of American citizens. He simply stigmatizes the action of the Paraguay Government in this respect as an outrage yet unavenged.

The territory on both sides of the Parana, up to the confluence of the Paraguay, belongs to the Argentine Confederation, with the exception of a portion of the right bank, about 145 miles in extent, which pertains to Buenos Ayres. The Provinces bordering on the river are Entre Rios and Corrientes on the left, and Santa Fe on the right—the latter chiefly inhabited by various tribes of Indians. This extent of country embraces some 200,000 square miles. It is watered by navigable rivers and well studded with timber. The fertility of the soil is unsurpassed. It is sparsely populated, though in Rosario, Province of Santa Fe, the population is increasing with surprising rapidity; a result owing partly to a popular form of Government, and partly to the anticipated construction of a railroad from Rosario to Cardova. The Parana is subject to a periodical rise and fall, and in September, when the Water Witch ascended, it was at its lowest state, but no difficulty was experienced.

The periodical rise and fall in the Paraguay are just the reverse in the Parana. The average width of the Paraguay is from one-eighth to three-quarters of a mile. From its mouth to Ascension, the Capital—a distance of 250 miles—there was found no less than 20 feet of water when the river had fallen two feet. Lieut. PAGE dwells on the admirable adaptability of these rivers for steam navigation. There are no obstructions to navigation in the shape of shoals or rocks. The Paraguay wood from the Banks was ascertained to be equal in the production of steam to a ton of the best Anthracite coal. The country is very thinly settled. Between the most Northern Paraguayan and the most Southern Brazilian station—a distance of 250 miles—there was not a single civilized habitation. From Coimbra the expedition ascended to Corumba, a distance of 120 miles, and there reached the northern limit (Lat. 19° 5') to which the exploration in Paraguay was circumscribed by the Brazilian Government—a point, in the interior of South America, very little short of 2,000 miles from the Ocean by the course of the river. Lieut. PAGE is of opinion that the Water Witch could have ascended at least 300 miles further—to Cayaba, the capital of the Brazilian frontier State of Matto Grasso, which presents an important market to commerce. This fact—that the Paraguay is navigable to the heart of one of the richest Brazilian Provinces—is considered one of the grandest results of the expedition. At this interesting point further explorations of all the waters of Paraguay or the entry within the limits of her territory was prohibited by a formal proclamation, and, by the outrage above mentioned, exploration of the Parana was prohibited also. At the same time the Brazilian prohibition against exploring the tributaries of the Paraguay within its jurisdiction was removed. Lieut. PAGE believes that the time is not far distant when these prohibitions will no longer exist, but a more enlightened policy will prevail.

Lieut. PAGE here enters at length into the products of Paraguay. The "Yerba" up to this time has been her chief source of profit. But independent of this, as well as of the wealth in immense herds of cattle, her iron and other mines and her capabilities for agricultural development will be of incalculable value.

The Bahia Negra, a tributary of the Paraguay, and emptying into that river about 28 miles below Coimbra was then explored. After ascending 36 miles, the river was found to be closed by an impracticable growth of grass: but this impediment, Lieut. PAGE thinks, might be removed and an opening effected into a region of Bolivia, called Otergis, which would give that State the nearest approach to water navigation at all seasons. The report then enters into a description of the improvements—social, industrial, and political—which Paraguay has undergone in the last few years; noticing also the increase of exports and imports from and to Assumption, results of the free navigation of the Parana and Paraguay. The wood of the country is especially noted for its various species and great value. The Provinces of Corrientes and Entre Rios are then explored. Here, agricultural resources are neglected; the inhabitants look for profit to trade in horses and cattle, for the raising of which the soil is well adapted. But laboring hands and an agricultural population are most wanted to develop the great resources of these Provinces.

The River Uruguay is next explored. It bounds Entre Rios, and Corrientes on the east, and separates these two provinces from the Banda Oriental and Brazil. It is navigable for 250 miles up to the "Salta Grande," where the progress of vessels is arrested by rapids. The scenery on either side is described as surpassingly beautiful.

The next, and a very important exploration, was that of the River Salado, and its operations in connecting the Paraguay, Parana and Uruguay with the La Plata. The work was commenced under discouraging circumstances, for Lieut. PAGE sought in vain for information. He, however, left the Water Witch, and with a small party chartered a light steamer and there entered the Salado. This river was ascended several hundred miles when, further progress being impossible, the expedition returned to Santa Fé—a frontier military post about 300 miles from the mouth—and from the Colonel Lieut. PAGE received to proceed to meet the expedition at the Rosario. His journey from Santa Fé to Rosario—a distance of 200 miles—was performed on horseback and accomplished in safety. Through the kindness of the Gov. of Santiago the party were furnished with a boat and an escort, and, thus provided, they determined to effect the descent of the Salado, in the vessel of which they had been foiled. All being ready, the boat was transported by oxen a distance of 40 miles, and then was launched upon the Salado. The descent was not impracticable, but the delays occasioned by overhanging trees was so great, that Lieut. PAGE determined once more to proceed by land. These trees which could be easily removed, are the only obstacles to safe navigation. At no point, since the boat was abandoned, was there less than six feet of water, and the low state of the river (throughout a distance of seven hundred miles from its mouth) continued not longer than two months of that year. Lieutenant PAGE says, that from Santiago to Santa Fé there is not an obstruction in the river which could not be removed by manual labor, without the use of machinery, or calling into requisition the science of engineering. There are neither rocks nor shoals. That the important discovery is made that, during high water the River Salado is navigable for 900 hundred miles, by its course, or 400 in a direct line. Lieutenant PAGE speaks of the great healthiness of the climate; and says, that in the midst of exposure and hardship there was an unusual absence of sickness among both officers and crew of the Water Witch. In the report extracts are given from native papers to show the deep interest felt by the people in the explorations and discoveries of Lieutenant PAGE. This expedition up the Salado occupied over two months.

The collections in Natural History obtained by the Water Witch are described as very comprehensive, and as far the largest collection ever made in South America by any American expedition.

Lieutenant PAGE concludes his report by reviewing the great inducements held out to emigrants by the provinces of the La Plata—a salubrious climate and a fertile soil. With a laboring population the future greatness of such a country would no longer be a problem, but its vast resources would be developed with astonishing rapidity.

Report of the Secretary of War.

The Report of the Secretary of War is voluminous and interesting.

The authorized strength of the Army is 17,964; the actual strength on the 1st of July was 15,562. The number of enlistments during the twelve months ending Sept. 30 was 4,440; the number of persons offering to enlist, but who were rejected for minority or unfitness, was 5,694. The number of casualties during the last fiscal year, by deaths, discharges and desertions, was 6,096, of which 3,223 were by desertion.

The movements of troops for the last year are related briefly.

The Indian difficulties on the Western plains have been successfully terminated, except with the Cheyennes. In Texas, though the military force has been reduced during the last year, there has been a considerable decrease of Indian disturbances. It suggests the propriety of removing the fragmentary tribes of Indians in Texas to reservations on the United States lands north of the Red River, which would greatly reduce the expenditures for keeping them in subjection by rendering the maintenance of so many military posts unnecessary.

The Indian war on the Pacific is ended. The possessory rights of the Hudson's Bay and Puget's Sound Companies are held by persons who owe no allegiance to us, but whose influence for evil is unbounded with the Indians. The Report suggests the extinguishment of these rights.

The expense and embarrassment to the service resulting from the present policy of locating military posts in advance of settlement, and along emigrant routes across the continent, are dwelt upon at length. They are manifested in the large amounts required for transportation, and in the small garrisons found at most of the posts. The condition of things which led to the adoption of this policy originally, has entirely changed. It began when the settlers were rapidly pushing their way to the fertile regions in the Valley of the Mississippi. The reports of reconnoissances submitted by the War Department during the last few years, show that with few exceptions the country lying between the hundredth meridian of longitude and the coast range of mountains overlooking the Pacific, is not susceptible of cultivation with the aid of artificial means, and that it can never be covered by an agricultural population. The limit, therefore, has been reached beyond which civilization has ceased to flow in the train of advancing military posts. A new post established in this desert region does not become the nucleus of settlement, from which in a short time provisions and forage can be drawn, and the expense of transportation be thus reduced to a necessary supply of groceries, implements and munitions of war; but all the heavy articles of subsistence must be procured from a remote market, transported not by water, but over roads made by the United States.

The settlement of New-Mexico was begun long anterior to that of large portions of many populous districts in the States, yet to this day cultivation has extended little beyond the Red Bravo; and though fort Laramie and Kearney, on the Oregon route, have been long established, there are no agricultural settlements about them. Though we have been in the habit of believing that the great basin of Utah presented a fertile oasis, recent events furnish much reason to doubt its capability to sustain any considerable population depending on its own resources year after year.

In view of these considerations, instead of dispersing the troops to form small garrisons at numerous posts, where we only exhibit our weakness to the savage foe, the Secretary suggests that within the fertile regions a few points accessible by steamboats or railways should be selected, at which large garrisons should be maintained, and from which strong detachments should annually be sent out into the Indian country during the season when grass will suffice for the support of draft and burden. These detachments would be available both to hunt up and chastise those tribes which had committed depredations, and to give needful protection to emigrants to or from the Pacific slope during the traveling season.

Experience has shown that small posts are nearly powerless beyond their own limits. Some of the most flagrant depredations have been committed on parties in the vicinity of such military posts, and the inability to pursue and punish the offenders has tended to bring into disrepute the power and energy of the United States, whose citizens are the victims of predatory attacks. In fact, these posts being fixed points in the route of emigrants, afford the Indians opportunity of observing each train which passes, and thus determine upon their future operations.

Cavalry cannnot be sustained in a state of efficiency during the Winter; and without stables, grain and hay, which are almost impossible to procure, and then only at enormous cost. Infantry garrisons are less expensive, because less forage is required.

If sufficient garrisons were kept at all the posts now established for the purpose of making expeditions at any time among the neighboring tribes, it is not believed they would be equally effective with marching detachments of the same numerical strength. Their position would be known, their preparations for taking the field observed, and a considerable force, if necessary, could be left behind for the protection of the public property at each post. The instruction and discipline in quarters would be inferior to that of large garrisons, and the capacity of troops suddenly emerging from quarters to begin forced marches of pursuit, would be less than that of men inured by long marches and frequent bivouacs to bear fatigue and protect themselves against exposure incident to service in the field.

The present policy of distribution also involves the frequent construction and abandonment of posts, and the employment of all the troops much of the time at constant labor, alike injurious to military instruction and the contentment of the men. It also involves the continual abandonment of a position soon after it has been made comfortable, which leaves the soldier without inducement for the sacrifices he may be called upon to make, and tends to increase the number of desertions.

Under the new policy suggested the troops would be comfortably quartered in the midst of civilization. Their Summer campaign would be the field-question of their profession, the temporary dangers and toils of which would give zest to the soldier's life, with a prospect of return to the comforts, association and means of instruction of a large garrison at a well-established post at a given time.

It is believed that such an arrangement would make the service attractive to persons of military spirit, and that the efficiency of the troops would be increased proportionately as the expense of supporting them would be diminished.

The occupation of Algeria by the French is cited as one parallel to our frontier service, affording an instance of the practical working of a system similar to that proposed. A critical examination of this proposed radical change in our Army distribution is invited, and legislation to carry it into effect is suggested.

The sea-coast fortifications are progressing, but there is much yet to be done before many of the most important will be efficient. The fortifications for harbor defense are held to be most efficient, and reference is made to the slaughter of formidable naval armaments against fortified places in the Black Sea and the Baltic, as showing conclusively that properly-constructed fortifications are a sure reliance against the most formidable fleets. The Report urges the importance of completing the fortifications in progress, and of making liberal appropriations for new ones. Time is necessary to make them efficient, and it ought to be done while the country is in a state of peace, because it cannot be done hastily except at increased expense, and then not reliably.

The Secretary asks a law for liberal appropriations for armaments for new forts, improvements in small arms, and the accumulation of supplies of ammunition. At the present rate of appropriations by Congress, it would require forty years to supply each mounted piece at the forts with a hundred rounds of ammunition; but, as many needed fortifications will, doubtless, be built within that period, at its end our armament, probably, would not be more complete than now.

It requires no argument to show that fortifications without guns are worse than useless.

The report recommends the substitution of wrought-iron for wooden gun-carriages; asks for an appropriation for experiments to determine the expediency of mounting, in certain positions covering channels, guns of large calibre, to throw hollow projectiles of great diameter and weight, containing sufficient charges of powder to render a single one destructive of any vessel which it may penetrate.

In order to supplify our field artillery, and increase the range and power of that arm, preparations are in progress for a trial by the light-artillery companies of four batteries of light 12-pounders, to be substituted for the present six-pound batteries.

The Secretary reviews his recommendation for the establishment of a national foundry for casting guns.

The operations of the national armories have been restricted to the completion of new models for small arms, and the alteration of old models to the long-range rifled arms, and to the preparations requisite for the exclusive manufacture of the adopted new model, which is a rifled arm, such as is commonly called the Minié rifle, with an improvement of the lock after Maynard's plan. The alteration of the common flint lock to the self-priming has been effected to a limited extent. The report recommends the alteration to this model of all the old arms of the United States, including those distributed to the States. There are, altogether, upwards of half a million, and the alteration recommended is absolutely necessary, to prepare the country to meet any sudden emergency. It also recommends a law providing for a better system of accountability for arms furnished by the Government to the States.

The question of the proper rifle to be adopted for the service, if any, beside leading rifle is best to adopt in the service.

The arsenals at Watervliet, N. Y., and Fayetteville, N. C., are recommended to be used for arsenals of construction, for which an extension of the buildings is required.

The movements of the Military Commission sent to Europe during the late war are briefly detailed, and the courtesy with which they were treated by Russia and England acknowledged. In regard to France on this point, the Secretary maintains a significant silence.

Increased pay to the officers is earnestly urged. The increased number of resignations last year is evidently the consequence of the insufficiency of the present pay. The Secretary says there is surely no economy in a practice which must in the end drive the more active and intelligent from a service which they adorn, and in which their country especially requires them to seek competent support in some other pursuit. As little does it accord with generosity or justice, to ask at their hands the sacrifice so many of them make to professional pride and love for their country's service and flag.

The Secretary renews his recommendation for a retired list of disabled officers, as indispensable to the efficiency of the service. He also renews his recommendation that the Legislature establish definite rules for the determination of rank and command, and for a legislative remedy for the continual frauds upon the service by the enlistment of minors, representing themselves of mature age.

The new military roads for which appropriations have been made are rapidly progressing, and money is asked to complete them.

The report recommends that pensions be provided for the widows and orphans of officers and soldiers of the Army, the same as the Navy, and suggests legislation to improve and simplify the system of Army accounts. It details the manner in which the River and Harbor appropriations have been expended; presents a somewhat detailed account of the progress of the Capitol-extension, and other public buildings; narrates the Army movements in connection with the Kansas difficulties, in aid of the civil authorities; and concurs in the high commendation which the Commanding General of the Department of the West bestows on Lieut.-Col. Cook and the officers and men who have so satisfactorily performed the duty imposed on them in Kansas.

Report of the Postmaster-General.

The Postmaster-General's report shows the following facts:

On the 19th of June, 1856, there were 28,505 Post-Offices, being an increase of 4,864 in four years.

On the 15th of June there were in operation nearly 9,000 mail routes, the total length of which was estimated at 235,642 miles, costing $8,085,474. These mail routes were divided as follows: 26,225 miles railroad, 14,951 steamboat, 50,458 coach, and nearly 154,000 inferior grades.

The increase during the last fiscal year was nearly 20,000 miles Railroad; 322, steamboat; 1,250, coach, and 82,000, inferior grades.

In Nebraska and Kansas, 10,238 miles were added to the length of the routes.

Between the 1st of July, 1855, and 1st of July, 1856, the Railroad service was increased 19,177 miles, exhibiting the fact that within that time this description of service was more than doubled.

On the 1st of December, 1856, the length of the Railroad routes had increased to 21,519 miles. The total cost for this service at that date amounted to $2,402,747.

The whole cost of the inland service, on the 1st of July, was $6,526,098.

He alludes to the Panama Railroad Company seizing on the occasion of the withdrawal of the steamers, off Nicaragua, to force the Department to pay what he considers an exorbitant price across the Isthmus, and recommends regular contracts with them, not exceeding $50,000 per annum, and a contract not exceeding $200,000 per annum, off the Nicaragua or Tehuantepec route, so as to give a weekly mail.

The California expenditures for the year 1856 were $10,196,268, and the gross revenue, including annual appropriations for free mails, $7,828,621. The deficiency is $2,367,609.

He recommends the abolition of the franking privilege, and compulsory prepayment on all transient printed matter; also the repeal of the act of 1845, which gives the Postmaster-General discretionary power to make new contracts for ocean steamship service. He alludes to the fact, embracing the branch from New-Orleans to Havana, that there are now four ocean steamship lines running out of New-York, at an expense to Government of $1,400,000 per annum, and says that there is no reason why one part of the country should be preferred, to the exclusion of others.

Among other points it is stated that negotiations are in progress with a view to the reduction of the transit charge on United States closed mails, and the rates of postage between the United States and Great Britain to twelve cents a single letter.

Report of the Secretary of the Interior.

To the Department of the Interior, by the organic act, is confided the supervision of the Patent Office, the General Land Office, the Pension Office, the Commissioner of Public Buildings, the Board of Inspectors and Warden of the Penitentiary of the District of Columbia, the Census, and the accounts of the Marshals, Clerks and other officers of the United States Courts, embracing those of the District of Columbia, and to these have since been added the Indian Asylum, the Mexican Boundary Survey, and the construction of several territorial roads. The Report by the Secretary of the Interior holds that the also here imposed upon the Department is quite sufficient, and that no more burdens should be laid upon it.

The survey of public lands has progressed rapidly—the quantity, exclusive of school sections, surveyed since the last report and up to the 30th of September, being 16,072,639 acres. In the execution of the graduation act, many grave questions have arisen; some of which cannot be satisfactorily settled without the interposition of Congress. The language with which it has been, in many respects, drafted is particularly complained of. The quantity of land sold for cash during the last fiscal year is 9,867,879 acres, for which the sum of $8,821,414 was received; the quantity located with military scrip and land warrants is 3,329,450; the swamp lands approved to the States 6,036,674, that granted for railroad purposes 15,606,675, making a total of 36,236,188 acres. The Secretary remarks that the difficulties in executing satisfactorily the swamp-land grants still exist. In reviewing the land system for the past four years, the report states that it has been extended with entire success and unprecedented rapidity along the whole Pacific slope, embracing California, Oregon and Washington Territories, and into Kansas, Nebraska, New-Mexico and Utah. This immense geographical surface has been organized into six new surveying departments. During this period there have been sold for cash 30,-966,174 acres, for which there has been received $27,940,151; located for military bounties 15,002,360, approved under swamp-land grants 20,190,676, and granted for railroads 17,606,268; making the aggregate of 83,975,782 acres, disposed of in part for farms by direct grants. As one illustration of the great labor incident to the accomplishment of these operations, it is mentioned that the records of correspondence cover ninety thousand folio pages. Eight thousand accounts have been adjusted, and four hundred thousand land patents have been issued by the General Government.

The discontinuance of four offices of Surveyor-General is recommended, and initiatory steps have been taken to that end. The number of applications under the recently enacted bounty land laws, to the 25th of November, was 366,993; those examined 289,726, of which 182,610 have been allowed, and warrants issued covering 28,002,280 acres; 57,056 have been suspended or rejected, leaving 35,543 original cases not yet examined. The report recommends that further power be given to the Commissioner of Pensions to suspend, dismiss, or discontinue pensions when the reason for granting them has partially or totally ceased, and the Secretary is convinced from the opinion of the Attorney, there are distinctions and discriminations between army and navy pensions which are unreasonable, and should not be permitted longer to exist. On 30th of June last there were 13,983 pensioners, and the amount disbursed for their benefit during the fiscal year was $1,340,694. The continued perpetration of frauds in connection with pensions is noted. Particulars of the applications for pensions, and the warrants issued, will be found in the Secretary's report published elsewhere.

The field-work of the Mexican Boundary Commission has been all accomplished, as stated in the last report, The Mexican Commissioner, according to agreement with the American Commissioner, repaired to Washington about the 1st of July last, for the purpose of constructing the maps required by the treaty to show the boundary, and three maps will be furnished by the 1st of March next. The first part of the report is already in the hands of the printer, and nothing retards its publication but the necessary delays in engraving the maps.

Since the 1st of January last the Patent Office has issued 9,856 patents, and within the year the number will probably be increased to some 9,500. The income of the office this year will be about $200,000. This branch of the department receives a lengthened notice from the Secretary.

The report again calls attention to the extraordinary expenses of the judiciary, and urges the absolute necessity for a radical change or modification of such of the laws as relate thereto.

In regard to the Insane Asylum, the report says that on the 30th of June, 1856, there were within the same 60 patients, and during the fiscal year there were received 47; 9 died, 6 were discharged, and there were left on the 30th of June, 1856, 92 patients. The institution is in a flourishing condition, and bids fair to be the first in the country.

The Penitentiary and proposed new Jail in the city of Washington are noticed in the report. It also draws attention to the want of suitable accommodations for the Criminal Court of the District of Columbia. The Bridge across the Potomac will not be finished this Winter, but a full report on the progress made may be expected in February. The report notices that the improvement of the grounds south of the Executive Mansion has been completed; and, though all that is required has not been done, yet the public grounds in the city of Washington have been considerably improved.

The Indian lands in the territory of Kansas, which were to be sold, and the proceeds applied to the use of the Indians, are in a state of preparation for sale. A portion of the Delaware lands were advertised to be sold on the 17th November, and every precaution was adopted to secure fairness. During the present Administration there have been negotiated 52 Indian treaties, and of these, 32 were ratified by the Senate, and 20 remain to be acted on. By these treaties the Indian title has been extinguished to lands amounting to 174,134,710 acres, of which about 50,000,000 are included in the ratified treaties, and about 120,000,000 acres are secured by those now before the Senate, besides 12,249,800 acres reserved for Indian purposes. The aggregate money consideration involved is $11,-184,308. The report enters into some interesting statistics respecting negotiations and dealings with the Indians, and closes with bearing testimony to the able manner in which the Chiefs of Bureaus and the employes of the Department have discharged their official duties.

Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is an exceedingly interesting document. The improvement in the condition of New-York Indians is very perceptible; the farms, buildings, crops and stock, and the substantial comforts surrounding the homes of many of the Onéidas, Onondagas, Tuscaroras, and the Tonawandas, Cattaraugus, and Allegheny Senecas, evidence in them a uniform advancement. Churches and religious influences and schools are well sustained among them. The Ottawas and Chippewas, and the Chippewas of Saginaw, Swan Creek and Black River, all within the State of Michigan, continue to increase, and, from present indications, seem to justify the hope that they will soon attain a much higher state of civilization. The Chippewas of Lake Superior have been furnished with a liberal supply of farming implements and household furniture, the effect of which policy has been most salutary, and has stimulated many to erect new houses. Schools are now established in their potato, and if another agent was appointed, (the business being too extensive for one,) much further good may yet be accomplished. The condition of the PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

[illegible] to promote this object, legislative enactments and other measures were attempted to take away or defeat rights, which the Constitution clearly secured. In order to nullify the clause existing by act of Congress concerning the extradition of fugitives from service, laws were enacted in many States, forbidding their officers, under the authority of their respective States, to participate in the execution of any act of Congress whatever. In this way that system of harmonious cooperation between the authorities of the United States and of the several States, for the maintenance of their common institutions, which existed in the early years of the Republic, was destroyed; conflicts of jurisdiction seemed to be frequent; and Congress found itself compelled, for the support of this Constitution, and the vindication of its power, to authorize the appointment of new officers charged with the execution of its acts, as if they and the officers of the States were the ministers, respectively, of foreign governments in a state of mutual hostility, rather than fellow magistrates of a common country, peacefully subsisting under the protection of one well-constituted Union. Thus, here, also, aggression was followed by reaction; and the attacks upon the Constitution, as the point did not serve to raise up new barriers for its defence and security.

The third stage of this unhappy sectional controversy was in connection with the organization of Territorial Governments, and the admission of new States into the Union. When it was proposed to admit the State of Maine, by separation of territory from that of Massachusetts, and the State of Missouri, formed of a portion of the territory ceded by France to the United States, representatives in Congress objected to the admission of the latter, unless with conditions suited to particular views of public policy. The imposition of such a condition was successfully resisted. But, at the same period, the question was presented by imposing restrictions upon the residue of the territory ceded by France. That question was, for the time, disposed of by the adoption of a geographical line of institution.

In this connection it should not be forgotten that France, of her own accord, resolved, for considerations of the most far-sighted sagacity, to cede Louisiana to the United States, and that accession was accepted by the United States, the latter expressly engaging that "the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States; and in the meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess." Thus the so say, while it remains in a territorial condition, its inhabitants are maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, with a right then to pass into the condition of States on a footing of perfect equality with the original States.

The enactment, which established the restrictive geographical line, was acquiesced in rather than approved by the States of the Union. It stood on the statute book, however, for a number of years; and the people of the respective States acquiesced in the reenactment of the principle as applied to the State of Texas; and it was proposed to acquiesce in its further application to the territory acquired by the United States from Mexico. But this proposition was unsuccessfully resisted by the representatives from the Northern States, who, regardless of the statute line, insisted upon applying restriction to the new territory generally, whether lying north or south of it, thereby repealing it as a legislative compromise, and, on the part of the North, persistently violating the compact, if compact there was.

Thereupon this enactment ceased to have binding virtue in any sense, whether as respects the North or the South; and so in effect it was treated on the occasion of the admission of the State of California, and the organization of the Territories of New-Mexico, Utah, and Washington.

Such was the state of this question, when the time arrived for the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska. In the progress of constitutional inquiry and reflection, it had now at length come to be seen clearly that Congress does not possess constitutional power to impose restrictions of this character upon any present or future State of the Union. In a long series of decisions, on the fullest argument, and after the most deliberate consideration, the Supreme Court of the United States had finally determined this point, in every form under which the question could arise, whether as affecting public or private rights—in questions of the public domain, of religion, of navigation, and of servitude.

The several States of the Union are, by force of the Constitution, co-equal in domestic legislative power. Congress cannot change a law of domestic relation in the State of Maine; no more can it in the State of Missouri. Any statute which proposes to do this is a mere nullity; it takes away no right, it confers none. If it remains on the statute-book unrepealed, it remains there only as a monument of error, and a beacon of warning to the legislator and the statesman. To repeal it will be only to remove imperfection from the statutes, without affecting, either in the sense of permission or of prohibition, the action of the States, or of their citizens.

Still, when the nominal restriction of this nature, already a dead letter in law, was in terms repealed by the last Congress, in a clause of the act organizing the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, that repeal was made the occasion of a widespread and dangerous agitation.

It was alleged that the original enactment being a compact of perpetual moral obligation, its repeal constituted an odious breach of faith.

An act of Congress, while it remains unrepealed, more especially if it be constitutionally valid in the judgement of those public functionaries whose duty it is to pronounce on that point, is undoubtedly binding on the conscience of each good citizen of the Republic. But in what sense can it be asserted that the enactment in question was invested with perpetuity and entitled to the respect of a solemn compact? Between whom was the compact? No distinct contending powers of the Government, no separate sections of the Union, treating as such, entered into treaty stipulations on the subject. It was a mere clause of an act of Congress, and like any other controverted matter of legislation, received its final shape and was passed by compromise of the conflicting opinions or sentiments of the members of Congress. But if it had moral authority over men's consciences, to whom did this authority attach? Not to those of the North, who had repeatedly refused to confirm it by extension, and who had zealously striven to establish other and incompatible regulations upon the subject. And if, as it thus appears, the supposed compact had no obligatory force as to the North, of course it could not have had any as to the South, for all such compacts must be mutual and of reciprocal obligation.

It has not unfrequently happened that law-givers, with undue estimation of the value of the law they give, or in view of imparting to it peculiar strength, make it perpetual in terms; but they cannot thus bind the conscience, the judgment, and the will of those who may succeed them, invested with similar responsibilities, and clothed with equal authority. More careful investigation may prove the law to be unsound in principle. Experience may show it to be imperfect in detail and impracticable in execution. And then both reason and right combine not merely to justify, but to require its repeal.

The Constitution, supreme as it is over all the departments of the Government, legislative, executive, and judicial, is open to amendment by its very terms; and Congress or the States may, in their discretion, propose amendment to it, solemn compact though it is in truth is between the sovereign States of the Union. In the present instance, a political enactment, which had ceased to have legal power or authority of any kind, was repealed. The position assumed, that Congress has no moral right to enact such repeal, was strange enough, and singularly so in view of the fact that the argument came from those who openly refused obedience to existing laws of the land, having the same popular designation and quality as compromise-acts—nay, more, the unequivocally disregarded and condemned the clear, positive and obligatory injunctions of the Constitution itself, and sought, by every means within their reach, to deprive a portion of their fellow-citizens of the equal enjoyment of those rights and privileges guaranteed alike to all by the fundamental compact of our Union.

This argument against the repeal of the statute line in question, was accompanied by another of a cognate character, and equally with the former destitute of foundation in reason and truth. It was asserted that the measure originated in the concealment and extending the limits of slave-labor beyond those previously assigned to it, and that such was its avowed object as well as tendency; all those positive assertions were made in the Northern States, on the ground of exciting prejudice upon Constitutional right.

The repeal in terms of a statute, which was already obsolete, and also null for unconstitutionality, could have no influence to extend or prevent the propagation of certain existing views of political or social institution. When the act organizing the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska was passed, the inhabitants of those Territories, who alone had a right to decide on the question, were left perfectly free to regulate their own domestic concerns and their own social institutions. Of course, they brought with them, into the Territories, the institutions which they severally had in their respective States of origin, and they were equally free to exclude the one or the other, as they might severally determine. Slavery existed in one of the States of the Union, and was prohibited in the others by the exercise of the sovereign power belonging to each State, as the People thereof severally deemed expedient. The population of the United States, of which the population of the Territories is but a small portion, is about equally divided between the slave-holding and the non-slave-holding States, which they severally represent in the National Legislature. Each class of States, and the citizens thereof, severally claim that their institutions are the best, the most conducive to the happiness and prosperity of themselves and posterity, and they severally are desirous of the extension of their institutions over the Territories, in the belief that the institutions of each are the most favorable to the enjoyment of the blessings of liberty, and to the development and maintenance of the true principles of civil and religious liberty, and of the rights of man. Each party, therefore, is desirous of the ascendancy of its principles, in the councils of the Union, in the hope that the institutions of the Union will be made conformable to its own peculiar views. Each party, therefore, is desirous of the ascendancy of its political friends in the Legislative Halls of the Union, in the hope that laws may be enacted and executed in conformity with its own views and principles. Each party is desirous of the ascendancy of its friends in the Executive Department, in the hope that the Executive Power of the Government may be exerted in the application of its own peculiar views to the administration of the Government in its relations to the Territories and to the States. Each party is desirous of the ascendancy of its friends in the Judicial Department, in the hope that the Judicial Power may be exerted to the establishment of its own peculiar views upon the institutions of the country. Each party is desirous of the ascendancy of its friends in the Executive and Legislative Departments of the Government, in the hope that the Executive Power may be exerted in the appointment of Judges who entertain views favorable to those of the party in question,

GRADUATION.

In executing the graduation act, many grave questions have arisen, some of which cannot be satisfactorily settled without the interposition of Congress. The principal difficulty arises from the fact that, in many cases, although the land has been entered more than a year, no improvement, indicating a bona fide intention to perform the requirements of the law, has been made; in other cases, no improvement, but nothing else, has yet been made in pursuance of the intention of the act, without the slightest attempt at "actual settlement or cultivation." Patents upon entries have been suspended, and will be granted, whenever the proof shall be satisfied of the fairness of the transaction; but where there are reasonable grounds for suspicion, proof will be required to be filed, within a given period, to sustain the entry. It is, however, important for Congress to declare, whether the title of these lands shall pass to all, indiscriminately, or whether satisfactory evidence of a compliance with the spirit and intentions of the law shall be first required. The former course would tend most to the relief of the Land Office, as then the issue of the patents would be the only labor required. For the benefit of purchasers generally, and the States in which the graduated lands lie, it is important that the matter should be promptly disposed of, either by sanctioning and affirming the action of the General Land Office, or directing the patents to be issued without further requirement.

The quantity of land sold for cash during the second and third quarters of the present calendar year, is 1,000,000.00 acres; received therefor, $1,008,882 72.

SWAMP LANDS.

The difficulties in executing, satisfactorily, the swamp land grant, still exist. Several of the States have passed laws donating these lands for specific purposes, and they now complain, that if the selections are set aside for any cause, their faith must be violated. It is contended that most of those who are contesting the right of the States are mere speculators, and should not be permitted to defeat their permanent interests; that thereby many of the counties, and of their people, will be injured, and the Government not correspondingly benefited. Much of this is true, and, although many errors have been committed, yet it is worthy of consideration, whether, under all the circumstances, it is not the best policy to approve the selections, so far as they do not interfere with actual settlers.

COMPENSATION OF LAND OFFICERS.

By the act of April 30, 1842, it was supposed that the annual maximum compensation to registers and receivers of land offices was three thousand dollars each; the same being made up by the salary of five hundred dollars, and one per cent. commission, upon the moneys received from the sales of the public lands. But, under the ruling of the Supreme Court, the commission is computed upon the amount actually received, without regard to time, so that if the commission, together with a pro rata amount of the salary, reaches three thousand dollars in one month, and the officer's term then expires, the three thousand dollars is retained by him. In many cases it is thus made the interest of the officer to vacate the office, because for the remainder of the year he would have to discharge all the duties without further compensation; and where the lands in the district are, as sometimes is the case, in great demand, the Government might be compelled to pay the maximum compensation several times during the same year. It is an evil that needs correction.

SUMMARY FOR FOUR YEARS.

The land system under the legislative enactments of the last four years, and by the active measures taken to meet demands for settlement, has been extended with entire success and unprecedented rapidity along the whole Pacific slope—embracing the State of California, the Territories of Oregon and Washington, and into the Territories of Kansas, Nebraska, New-Mexico, and Utah. This immense geographical surface has been organized into six new surveying departments, and the public surveys are in rapid extension over it. Surveying operations in the new and old districts have, in the same period, been extended over an area of nearly sixty millions of acres, in which the lines have been run and established. During this period, also, there have been

	Acres
Sold for cash	20,055,174
For which there has been received	27,940,151
Located for military bounties	15,806,260
Approved under swamp-land grants	20,192,656
Granted for railroads	17,096,189
Making the aggregate	92,916,175

Disposed of in part for farms by direct grants to individuals, and in a large portion by titles issued as evidence to the defenders of the country—in part to aid the new States in redeeming from overflow and its consequences valuable lands, and turning them under tillage—and the residue in facilitating travel and intercourse, by the extension of the railway, canal, and other systems of national intercommunication—thereby, also, largely increasing the value of the landed interests of the country.

It is scarcely possible to convey a proper idea of the great labor incident to the accomplishment of the operations mentioned. It may be stated, however, among minor heavy items, that the records of patents extend over 80,000 folio pages, embracing decisions upon numerous intricate questions of title, not only derived from foreign governments, but arising out of the land legislation of Congress during the past half century. Besides this, 6,000 accounts have been adjusted, and 400,000 land patents issued by the Government.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

An examination has been made with a view to ascertain whether the number of offices of Surveyors-General could not be diminished, and it has been found that they have been gradually discontinued within the last two years, and the territory attached to the remaining offices.

[illegible] LAWS.

The number of applications, under the recently enacted bounty land laws, up to the 30th inst., was [illegible]; these embraced [illegible] of which [illegible] have been allowed, and [illegible] rejected, leaving [illegible] to be examined.

These laws have been [illegible] with all possible dispatch, and there are now [illegible] only one claim which has not been [illegible] of what was anticipated when the several laws were respectively passed. Although [illegible] were required were great, the work has been accomplished in a very brief period, and yet with [illegible].

The necessity of further [illegible] being given to the Commissioner of Patents, as regards distinct and separate inventions, upon the grounds for granting patents, has been [illegible] in daily operation [illegible] The Commissioner should be clothed with authority to revise the action of the examiners from the pension roll, or graduate the pension, when he is satisfied of the existence or diminution of the disability of an invalid pensioner. Cases of this kind are constantly occurring. Upon an investigation of this class of pensioners, in a portion of a single State, during the past year, it was found that of forty-seven [illegible] the amounts allowed in most of the remainder were much larger than their actual disability would entitle them to; so that, if these pensioners were properly graduated, the annual saving to the Treasury in the cases examined would be some three thousand dollars. As these are life allowances, the aggregate annual amount paid is very large in comparison with what it should be, and, as the number of this class of pensions is rapidly and constantly augmenting, unless some measure is adopted to prevent it, the evil will be largely increased.

INTELLIGENT PRINCIPLE.

Experience and reflection convince me that the only true principle upon which to base pensions is that of indigence. The meritorious and needy poor soldiers are now poorly aided by the General Government. The pensions, ranging from three and a half to eight dollars per month, are manifestly insufficient to supply their necessary wants, especially where they are compelled to furnish subsistence for dependent families. If the principle were adopted, and a reasonable increase made to the present pittance of those whose services and wants demand it, the amount annually appropriated would not be increased, but the distribution would be far more just, equitable and beneficial.

ARMY AND NAVY PENSIONS.

There are discrepancies and discriminations between army and navy pensions, which any unreasonable, and should not be permitted longer to exist. Both should be placed on an equality, as to the amount to be received, the circumstances under which they should be granted, and the time they should run; and disabilities in the one class should be of the same character as in the others.

On the 30th of June last there were 12,923 pensioners, and the amount disbursed for their benefit, during the fiscal year, was $1,340,234 61.

Every day's experience proves that the present system of confining the advances to pension agents to the amount of their semi-annual payments, has had a good effect. I am persuaded that, in most cases, when under the old system the pension agents were not directly compensated by the Government for their services—they were indirectly paid; otherwise, we cannot satisfactorily account for the large amounts of pension money they generally had on hand, over and above what was actually necessary to meet the current demands; nor can it be presumed that they would have performed the service without remuneration, or, if they received none, nor derived any benefit from the trust, that they would have rested content so long without presenting their claims to Congress.

FRAUD.

Notwithstanding the vigilance of the Pension Bureau, and the numerous precautions adopted, and the criminal proceedings instituted and successfully prosecuted, frauds are still being perpetrated, many of which cannot be prevented, or punished when discovered, without a revision of the laws relating to such offences.

SUMMARY OF PENSION OFFICE.

On the 30th of September, 1853, the number of applications for bounty land, pending, and on the suspended files of the Pension Office, liable to be called up for reexamination, was about	65,256
The number of new applications filed during the year following was about	20,676
During the ward year, about	12,491
And thence to the 30th September, 1856	258,100
Making, in all	367,523
The number of warrants issued during the year ending the 30th September, 1853, was about	41,063
The number issued the succeeding year was	17,735
During the next year	38,438
During the year ending 30th September, 1856	159,184
Making the total	256,421

The number of pensioners added to the rolls, between the 1st of April, 1853, and the 30th of September, 1856, is 2,565, the aggregate of whose yearly pensions is $704,290 74, besides the sum of $1,494,401 81, paid as arrearages immediately on the admission of the claims.

These are merely some of the results of the operations of the office. They convey but a faint idea of the various and complicated intermediate labors involved between the receipt of an application for bounty land or pension and the final determination of the claim, for, besides the examination, and, frequently, the reexamination of a claim before it is admitted, many pension claims have been presented (probably three times the number of those admitted) which have been examined and reexamined, and still suspended or rejected, and these generally require the most patient investigation and research.

The number of letters received at the office during the past year, is 197,800, and the number sent thence, 276,387; an extent of correspondence probably without a precedent. This vast amount of business is chiefly consequent upon the execution of laws passed during and subsequent to the year 1853, viz.: the Pension Act of Feb. 3, 1853, and the bounty land law of March 3, 1855, and the amendatory Act of May 14, 1856.

MEXICAN BOUNDARY.

The field work of the Mexican Boundary Commission was all accomplished, as stated in my last report, within the time contemplated, and largely within the means appropriated.

All the monuments agreed upon by the joint Commission have been erected, and the line is marked from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific; and the United States is in possession of the Territory.

A considerable portion of the boundary is formed by the Rio Bravo or Rio Grande; and in the settled portions of the valleys, which are best adapted to agriculture, the bed of the river sometimes changes, and transfers considerable portions of land from one side to the other. The Commissioners concluded, and it is thought with correctness, that except in the case of gradual accretions, on one or the other bank of the river, the boundary would remain where the river fixed it at the time of the survey and as shown on the maps, notwithstanding actual changes in the course of the river. A case of this kind is threatened in the valley of El Paso, and anxious inquiries have been made on the subject. The parties making the inquiries have been referred to the printed maps, and informed that any change in the river, detaching solid masses of land, does not change the jurisdiction.

The Mexican Commissioner, according to the agreement with the American Commissioner, repaired to this City with a corps of assistants, about the first of July last, for the purpose of constructing the maps required by the treaty to show the boundary, and is now here on that duty.

On the part of our Commissioner, these maps will be finished by the first of March next. Already the services of many of his assistants have been dispensed with, and it is in contemplation to discharge the whole force of draughtsmen before that time, and none of the employes will be retained except such as may be required to superintend the printing of the maps and reports, descriptive of the boundary and adjacent country, the publication of which was ordered by Congress at its last session.

The first part of the report is already in the hands of the printer, and nothing retards its publication but the necessary delays in engraving the maps.

Notwithstanding the Senate in its order for the publication of the report and accompanying appendix of the boundary commission, directed that the expenses of publication should be paid out of the boundary appropriations, there will remain of them, untouched in the Treasury, some eighty thousand dollars.

No officer could have discharged his duty with more ability or greater fidelity than the Commissioner to whom were confided the interests of this Government. And it is proper to state that the utmost harmony has existed on this commission between the officers of both the Governments, and that all questions likely to produce the least difference have been amicably settled, and, as is believed, to the entire satisfaction of all parties.

PATENT OFFICE.

Since the 1st day of January last, the Patent Office has issued 7,255 patents, and within the year the number will probably be increased to some 2,500.

All applications are promptly attended to, and it is hoped the interests of that meritorious class of our people, the inventors, are properly secured and protected. None are more worthy the fostering care of the General Government.

SUMMARY OF PATENT OFFICE.

From small beginnings the Patent Office has grown into proportions comparatively gigantic. Half a century ago the whole revenue of the office did not exceed $1,600 per annum, which was appropriated to the payment of one Clerk, who transacted the entire business of the office. The income for the present year will be about $200,000, which will still be scarcely sufficient to defray the current expenses of the office, with its one hundred Examiners, Clerks and other employes.

If we compare the present condition of the office with what it was a few years ago, we shall find that, during the four years previous to 1836, the average annual number of applications for patents was 3,823; while for the four subsequent years, such average will be about 4,000. The number of patents annually issued during the former period, averages 990; during the latter, about 1,650. For the current year, the whole number of applications made,—the whole number of patents granted, and the amount of revenue received, will, respectively, be at least double what they were in any previous year. The number of applications for patents in this office, the last year, was greater than that in any other country, having been 4,435, against 2,908, in Great Britain, and 4,056, in France. For the present year, the number of applications will probably reach 5,000.

The business of the office seems to have outgrown the system, upon which it has thus far been conducted, which was adapted to a previous stage of its existence. The wisdom of Congress may be profitably exercised in making such modifications as present circumstances require.

In addition to the business of the Patent Office proper, there has been devolved upon the Commissioner of Patents the supervision of the National Gallery, and the direction of the fund annually appropriated for agricultural purposes. The former of these duties is, comparatively, of small moment; the latter of great and rapidly-growing importance.

There seems no very natural or immediate connection between the legitimate business of the Patent Office and the subject of Agriculture, except in their general relation to the industrial pursuits of the people. But the revenues of the office, being somewhat in excess in 1850, the Commissioner of Patents was [illegible] to commence the purchase of seeds, [illegible] and distribute them among the people. The charge was [illegible] from the beginning, for the [illegible] purpose. These were increased from time to time, until they reached the sum of 80,000, where they remained nearly stationary for several years.

In 1854 the appropriation was increased to 100,000 and made payable out of the Treasury; and the operation for the coming year has been limited to this sum. The objects contemplated in the distribution, are declared to be "the collection of agricultural statistics, investigations for promoting agriculture and rural economy, and the procuring, propagation and distribution of valuable seeds."

In pursuance of the duties of Agriculture, measures have been taken to procure cuttings and seeds from every quarter of the globe, where any new product can be found which is likely to prove useful in any portion of the United States. Many new productions of great probable utility have thus been introduced, and others are being sought for wherever there is any prospect of success. A vessel has just been sent to South America for procure cuttings of the sugar cane to furnish our Southern planters with a fresh stock to supply the place of that which, it is supposed, has been deteriorated by continued cultivation, without renovation from the indigenous plant.

PATENT OFFICE BUILDING.

The front basement of the centre building, on the east wing of the Patent Office, have been finished, and, with the exception of the portico, which is in rapid progress, the same may be said of the west wing.

The centre front of the building has been commenced, and the foundation will probably be laid during the present season, so as to be ready for the superstructure in the Spring. Another appropriation has been asked for, which will nearly complete this part, according to the original plan and estimate; the object being to press it forward as rapidly as practicable, both on account of economy and utility. The entire structure, when finished, will temporarily accommodate all the bureaus of this department, but this should not deter Congress from making the necessary appropriations for a departmental building, which will be much needed, before, under ordinary circumstances, it can be constructed and prepared for occupancy. No valid reason can be assigned for further delay.

JUDICIARY.

I must again call your attention to the extraordinary expenses of the judiciary, and the absolute necessity for a radical change or modification of such of the laws as relate thereto. The act passed at the last session of Congress with a view of curing some of the defects, has, so far as tested, proved very beneficial. The pecuniary saving thereby has been large; but this is of little moment in comparison with the salutary influence it has had upon the class of officers it was intended to affect. Still new developments are being made, which show that many serious evils have silently crept into practice in some of our courts, which should be speedily remedied. Most of the laws for their prevention are seriously defective and need revision, and without Congressional action the officers of the Treasury and this department are powerless. As the laws now are, I can conceive of no better plan than to intrust the department with sufficient means to investigate all charges that may be preferred, whenever and wherever this department and the accounting officers of the Treasury are satisfied there is fraud, corruption or malfeasance in office.

INSANE ASYLUM.

On the 30th June, 1855, there were in the Insane Asylum sixty patients, and, during the fiscal year, there were received into it forty-seven;—eight have died; six were discharged—five of them being restored;—and there were left on the 30th of June last 98 patients. It is in a most flourishing condition, and bids fair to be the first in the country. The improvements are steadily progressing, and will be completed as rapidly as is desirable. The appropriations heretofore made are deemed ample for the next year, except a small amount, for which an estimate has been made, for the improvement of the farm and grounds and the purchase of horticultural and agricultural implements and machinery. Congress has already exhibited great liberality towards this institution, and, no doubt, the results will soon prove that it has not been improperly bestowed.

The number of convicts in the Penitentiary is 72. Thirty-five were admitted and 28 discharged, during the past year. The expense of managing it is now nearly equaled by the income, and the excess is being yearly diminished.

NEW JAIL.

The act of the 18th of August last required the Secretary of the Interior to select a suitable site for a new jail, at or near the Penitentiary, in the City of Washington, and to cause drawings and specifications to be prepared therefor, to be submitted, with an estimate of its cost, to Congress, at the next Session.

Early measures were taken to enable me to comply with the requisitions of this act. The architect in charge of the Patent Office Building was instructed to examine carefully, the most approved designs for buildings of the kind specified, and prepare the requisite drawings, specifications and estimates for the one proposed to be built.

He has attended to that duty, and furnished the plans herewith submitted, which are so arranged as to admit of an indefinite enlargement of the building, without interfering with its symmetry. The estimated cost is $150,000.

The act requires the site, for the new jail to be selected at or near the Penitentiary, and the Department is, accordingly, confined to that vicinity. The grounds adjoining the Penitentiary on the East belong, as I am informed, to the Government, and if the jail is to be erected in that neighborhood, I should recommend that it be placed there. Aside, however, from the fact that these grounds are understood to be needed by the War Department, there are serious objections to this locality, which should in my opinion, be brought to the attention of Congress before further proceedings are had respecting it.

The grounds are low and marshy, and at certain seasons of the year there is reason to fear the place would prove unhealthy, when occupied by so large a number (probably 150) as would usually be confined there, subject to the malaria from the creek on the one side, and the river on the other. It would be well, therefore, to seek a more healthful situation, and it is believed such may be found which would likewise be more convenient, in all respects, to the City. Should it be concluded to select another site, I am satisfied, from the examinations already made, that the Government would be the gainer in point of cost, as the extra expense of securing a safe foundation upon the grounds indicated by the act, together with that of filling up the premises to a proper grade, would be more than enough to make the requisite purchase.

COURT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

In this connection it is deemed proper to invite attention to the want of suitable accommodations for the Criminal Court of the District of Columbia. An appropriation was made at the last session for the alteration and improvement of the court-room heretofore used in common by the Circuit and Criminal Courts, which has been judiciously expended, and by means of which that room has been rendered convenient and comfortable.

These Courts are frequently in session at the same time, and hence a separate room is indispensable for the proper accommodation of each.

The Judges and the members of the Bar have recently united in a communication upon this subject, asking me "to urge upon the attention of Congress the necessity of extending the present court-house as proposed by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, so as to accomplish" that object. I have regarded this memorial as of so much interest as to direct its publication with the printed estimates of the Department, in the hope that suitable provision may be made by Congress at its next session to supply the wants therein so clearly shown to exist.

BRIDGE OVER THE POTOMAC.

With a view of effecting the object of Congress, in regard to the construction of the new and substantial bridge over the Potomac River, Alfred L. Rives, a Civil Engineer, was appointed to make the necessary surveys, examinations, plans, drawings and estimates. Every effort has been made, and is still making, to perform the service satisfactorily, and it is hoped that a full report of the results will be made before the month of February next, and in time for the consideration of Congress.

The work upon the Bridge across the Potomac at the Little Falls, in this District, has been intrusted to a skillful civil engineer. The appropriation was made so late in the season that the bridge could not be finished in time for travel the approaching Winter: but it will be pressed to completion as rapidly as practicable.

The appropriation made in 1855 for grading, &c., preparatory to the extension of the Capitol grounds, was judiciously and economically expended. As Congress appropriated the money without any estimate or recommendation of the Department, and as no general plan had been devised or adopted, it was not deemed proper to submit an item among the estimates presented at the last session of Congress, because the Department did not understand its design, and presumed, if its continuation was considered advisable, a suitable appropriation would be made for that purpose. As none, however, was made, and the wings of the Capitol are advancing rapidly to completion, and the grounds present a rough and inelegant appearance, it appears proper that the attention of Congress should be directed to it.

GROUNDS SOUTH OF EXECUTIVE MANSION.

The improvement of the grounds south of the Executive mansion has been completed, according to the plan adopted at its commencement. That part of the grounds immediately adjacent to the Executive premises is not sufficiently elevated, and further appropriations should be made with this view, not only because it would add to their beauty, but be promotive of the healthfulness of the Executive mansion and the neighboring residences. With a small expenditure of money this may be done, and the sooner it is accomplished the better, as now the change will not seriously interfere with the arrangement of the grounds.

PUBLIC GROUNDS IN WASHINGTON.

The public grounds in the city of Washington have been extensively improved and beautified, but still as much has not been done as is required. Within a few past years there has been more than usually liberal, but far from lavish. The comfort, health and convenience, not merely of the citizens, but of the members themselves, and all the functionaries of the Government, and every visitor to this city, demand that much larger expenditures should be made. When the money is judiciously expended, no one can object to its application. The whole nation is interested in the national metropolis, and the people will sanction anything relating to its improvement which is necessary and constitutional. Continuing to address these improvements will eventually be made by the Government, and being merely a question of time, an overflowing treasury suggests this as the proper period.

INDIANS.

The Indian lands in the Territory of Kansas, which by treaty stipulations were to be sold and the proceeds applied to the use of the Indians, are in a state of preparation for sale. A portion of the Delaware tribe, who have resided in law, contributed to be sold on the 18th inst. Every exertion has been made to secure strangers in the neighborhood of the land to attend and protect the interests of the Delaware Indians, and directions to the marshal of a Commissioner, who was detailed for the purpose, to repair to the place of sale, in order to advise with the Commissioner and guard and protect the interests of the tribe. If the instructions given, which were minute, and at the same time liberal, have been strictly adhered to, of which we entertain no doubt, all interested will be protected; but where there is so much diversity of feeling, and interest it is almost impossible to satisfy every one.

In my last report I stated that it would be advantageous to the Indians and the Government to provide for an officer to be attached to the Bureau, whose duty it should be to visit the superintendents, agents and tribes, examine into all their affairs, and make such general and detailed reports, and submit such suggestions as would enable the Indian Office to adopt measures which might correct many of the abuses that prevail, and have a tendency to ameliorate the condition of the Indians. Further reflection has strengthened this view. When it is considered that many of the agents are, to a great extent, beyond the reach of the Bureau, and that it is often impossible to communicate with or receive information from them for months; that they are, frequently, so situated as to defy investigation, and to fear no exposure, unless for the adoption of some such measure as is proposed,—it seems to me that its policy and expediency can not be doubted.

PURCHASE OF INDIAN RESERVES.

During your administration, there have been negotiated 52 Indian treaties; of these, 33 have been ratified by the Senate, and 20 remain yet to be acted on. By these treaties the Indian title has been extinguished to, and relinquishments made of, lands amounting in the aggregate to 154,154,712 acres; of which, about 52,000,000 are included in the ceded treaties, and about 122,000,000 are secured by those now before the Senate, besides 19,540,000 acres which have been reserved for Indian purposes. The aggregate money consideration involved is $11,138,209 30.

These treaties are of three classes;—of peace and friendship; of acquisition with a view to the colonization of the Indians on reservations; for providing for the permanent settlement of individual Indians upon separate tracts of land, as homesteads, and extinguishing at once or paving the way to the final abandonment of the tribal character.

The money considerations are varied according to the nature of the title, the resources and value of the country obtained, and the relinquishment of all claims or supposed claims against the United States; the last being deemed essential to the quietude of the Indians, to protect the interests of the Government and promote harmony between it and the respective tribes.

Besides the actual money consideration, other important benefits are guaranteed, at times and in the manner indicated in the treaties, which cannot be estimated accurately in money.

The object throughout has been to do ample justice to the Indians, and leave no room for the complaint sometimes heretofore made, that they had been overreached by the white man. Whether such complaint was just or not, there is no doubt the Indians believed, or were persuaded by others, that just grounds existed for its indulgence. It must be admitted, that in some cases, the "talks" with the Indians upon which treaties were based, did not correspond with the treaties themselves, and that the Indians generally relied on these "talks" which they recollected and understood, and not on the treaties, as reduced to writing, which they seldom, if ever, understood.

Great difficulty has heretofore existed, and still exists, in making even an approximate estimate of the population of the various tribes of Indians, within our borders, but from the most reliable information, they are now supposed to number some 300,000 souls. As we become more familiar with remote tribes, we find the representation made, as to their numbers, generally exaggerated. The aggregate number, however, of the whole, is very large, and although it will not probably increase, yet it shows the immense responsibility resting upon this Government, to which is intrusted their welfare and happiness.

The average amount annually expended by the general Government for the past six years for Indian purposes, has been about $3,625,982 61, and the aggregate amount for the entire period, $14,755,398 61.

A new policy has been adopted of making remittances to the disbursing officers of this bureau, quarterly and semi-annually, instead of the custom of drawing the entire appropriations from the Treasury, and placing them in the hands of the disbursing agents, officers, and superintendents, in advance of a necessity for the money. Officers are now required to transmit promptly, and monthly, a certificate, verified by oath, showing the amount of public money on hand at the expiration of each quarter, the objects to which it is applicable, where kept or deposited, and the description of funds. This serves to prevent difficulty, and to secure greater care and watchfulness.

The amount of stocks, held by this Department, in trust for the various Indian tribes, is $2,023,676. Some of the stocks have matured and been redeemed, and a reinvestment cannot be made, because the law confines the Department to stocks of the United States, which cannot be obtained, except at a high premium. In consequence of this, estimates have been annually made for appropriations for five per centum on the trust funds, held by and never drawn from the Treasury, to which the Department has resorted favorably, and thereby a policy has been initiated, if not established, which probably should not be disturbed.

During the present calendar year there will have been expended, and remitted for payment of Indian annuities, the sum of 2,007,982 65, in money, $190,392 89 in goods, and $80,166 67 in provisions. This shows that, notwithstanding the unremitting endeavors of the Department, a very large portion of the payments is still made upon the cash system; and this, to a certain extent, paralyzes the efforts made for the permanent improvement of the tribes.

The act of 1851 requires that all negotiations with the Indian tribes shall be conducted by regular officers of the Indian Bureau. This has largely increased its business, and added to the labors of its officers. These have been greatly augmented by the extended operations in the Territories of Washington, Oregon, Utah, New-Mexico, Kansas and Nebraska, and the States of Texas and California,—by attention to Indian claims for bounty land, enrollment of Choctaws in Mississippi, sale of Creek reserves in Alabama, enrollment of Sioux half-breeds on the Lake Pepin reservation, examination of the claims of traders against several of the tribes, setting off and surveying various Indian reservations, and steps preliminary to the division and allotment of lands, in severalty, to Indians; classifying and appraising Indian trust lands in Kansas, and other duties devolved on the bureau. The actual labor has been doubled within the last four years, as is exhibited by the leading and the most accurate data of the office transactions. And yet the number of permanent clerks is the same.

Since I entered upon my duties in this department, the jurisdiction of the Indian Bureau, and the operation of its agents, have been extended over an additional area of from 400,000 to 600,000 square miles; and thirteen new agencies, and nine sub-agencies, have been established by law.

The policy of the colonization of the Indians has already been attended with the happiest results, and gives promise of a steady progress in the amelioration of their physical and moral condition.

It is the universal testimony of those who, from long intercourse with them, are the most competent to form an accurate judgment of their characteristics, that as a rule, they are inoffensive and quiet; that they are inferior to no other aborigines, as they are, of the means and opportunities of higher culture. Their passions, unbridled by the mild influences of Christianity, frequently hurry them into the wildest excesses, sometimes accompanied with acts of frightful cruelty. Accounts of these alone meet the general eye, and excite in the public mind sentiments of loathing and horror. But of the strength of their domestic and social affections, the depth of their gratitude and attachment to those from whom they have received benefits, and by whom they have been treated with kindness and humanity, the public hear little or nothing.

Hence it is, that they have been heretofore left comparatively unprotected from violence and wrong, inflicted by unprincipled white men under the influence of unbridled passion, or in the pursuit of their own venal ends.

By such men, unworthy of the name, they are often cruelly beaten when unprotected, and not unfrequently shot down when defenceless, in mere wantonness. The bloody revenge, which sometimes follows, becomes the general theme unaccompanied with the circumstances of cruel provocation which gave it birth. A border warfare springs up between the pioneer settlers—who are really trespassers on their lands—and the tribe, and the strong arm of the Government being invoked for their protection, wars take place, which are carried on at much expense and at the cost of many valuable lives, retarding the progress of our people by rendering the conditions of the settler insecure, and closing, perhaps, with the annihilation of almost entire tribes.

This process of the destruction of a people, of whom Providence has given us the guardianship, originating in such causes, is unworthy of the civilization of the age in which we live, and revolting to every sentiment of humanity.

Considerations like these, based upon extensive observation and long experience, cannot fail to impress the absolute necessity of a perseverance in the system of colonization; which, by isolating the respective tribes within limits suitable to their numbers and their wants, under the care of agents and the immediate protection of the Government, will alike prevent them from committing and suffering wrong. So situated, it is already shown that the arts of civilization may be acceptably introduced among them, and the enlightening and elevating precepts of Christianity, by their influence upon their character and habits, transform the savage into the industrious and useful citizen, and ever commend us as a nation, to the approbation of the just and humane.

To effect so desirable an end, the faith of the nation for the integrity of these colonial reservations should be maintained inviolate;—manual labor schools should be introduced, in which the mechanic arts may be taught, and agricultural science, with its practical application, perseveringly inculcated by precept and example.

The Indian regards the white man as his superior, and the idea of the degradatory character of manual labor which he entertains will readily give way to the influence of his example, and a realization of the benefit derived therefrom.

But above all should Christian instruction be introduced, and sedulously prosecuted, by teachers devoted to the cause, in the true spirit of their divine mission. Without this, all subordinate means will be in vain, and the great duty which humanity imposes upon us, to rescue this unhappy race from entire destruction for the crimes and impurities of the white man, will be not only unfulfilled, but we will be chargeable with the blood of souls.

Arrest of Swindlers at Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, Tuesday, Dec. 2.

Two swindlers were arrested here last night at 11 o'clock, who represented themselves as Lord ARTHUR JOHN HUDSON and Sir CHARLES MILLER. Although stopping at one of the commonest taverns in the city, they succeeded in impressing several citizens and mechanics with the idea of their magnificence, many of whom they have bled for considerable amounts. During the fortnight they have been here they have represented they had on deposit with a broker of this city £40,000, and that they feared his stability. They actually bought an expensive safe for the security of their imaginary treasure. Lord JOHN had made arrangements for the purchase of a farm, well stocked, for $17,000, but when the deeds were drawn and ready to be signed for the consummation of the bargain, it was discovered that the swindlers were entirely penniless. They were arrested in the presence of the Parson and wedding guests during the progress of the marriage of one of the swindlers with the daughter of the landlord of the tavern where they were staying.

NEW-YORK CITY.

The Democrats last Night.

The Democrats had their elections last evening in each Ward, of five delegates to the Old Men's, and five to the Young Men's General Committees, and the several Ward Committees, for the year 1857. There was a contest of course between the Wood and Anti-Wood men, but everywhere WOOD prevailed. In the districts where the most voting was anticipated, it was particularly quiet. In the Ninth Ward, the election was held in a Coal office. The Inspectors had iron-barred the windows for their protection, which much offended the Anti-Woods, and a burly man among the disaffected took a sledge hammer to these obstacles against a free fingering of the returns. Two platoons of M. P.'s arriving, quiet was soon restored. In the Twenty-Second Ward, FERNANDO WOOD headed both tickets. Large numbers of colt-skins went in with the "Wood and Seagrist" ticket—enough to elect SEAGRIST. The "Wood and Doherty" people claim that they have much the largest number of hemp votes and mean to contest the result.

That Balloon.

That balloon that went up Monday came down again as might have been expected. She soared 5,511 feet high at her highest. She was hovering over Flushing for some time, about sun down. Her managers attempted, as it grew dark, to descend fifteen several times—but every time on descending they came down over the Sound. The last time they let her "slump" into the water. The brig Corbula, Capt. THOS. CHESLEY, bound from Virginia to New-Haven, came to their assistance—but the navigators worried their way to shore at Delancey's Point, between Mamaroneck and New-Rochelle, about 8½ P. M.

When over Flushing they descended within 468 feet of the ground, but declined the invitation kindly offered them to come down and eat boiled Dissepin Biscuits. Capt. MORAY enjoyed his ride very much, but his companion, Mr. P. O. KELLY, was not so well pleased.

The First Ward Boys and His Honor the Mayor.

A novel and an unusual sight was witnessed in front of the City Hall yesterday forenoon,—the review of a target company by His Honor the Mayor and staff. But the target company was not one of the every-day sort. It was dubbed the "First Ward Musketeers," and hailed of course from the First Ward, and embraced in its ranks all the noted "boys" of the "Crib" faction or Woodite. JOHN E. EMMERY, the notorious emigrant-forwarder, was Captain, PAT CALLAGHAN acted as First Lieutenant, and BILL HOLLAND did the honors of Ensign. The other offices were distributed among characters equally deserving. BILLY WILSON, Alderman elect, MIKE MURRAY, proprietor of the "Crib," and Big TOM BURNS, walked arm-in-arm as invited guests. Soup-House MIKE was also present, but without his star. Taking into consideration that the Court of Sessions has opened for the term, the boys looked remarkably jolly. "Who is afeard?" one of them was heard to say in confidence to a friend. "Who's afeard? My lawyer will get the case postponed till January, and then AB. RUSSELL will be the City Judge."

If justice be done, many of the "First Ward Musketeers" will obtain leave of absence from the City for some time.

But the Mayor no doubt believes in that old rule of common law, that every man is presumed innocent until found guilty, for he honored the First Ward Musketeers yesterday as he never did any target company before. 'Twas an instructive sight.

But the First Ward is thoroughly Democratic, and so are the Enright Musketeers.

Decapitation at the Custom-House.

Orders were received by Collector REDFIELD, from Secretary GUTHRIE, to shut up certain bonded warehouses in this City; also that at the Atlantic Docks, Brooklyn—assigning as a reason the slackness of business, some houses having nothing stored in them. So about thirty clerks and night watchmen on Monday were given their walking tickets, and are now, much against their will, gentlemen of leisure. This wholesale slaughter causes much anxiety among the "ins," who hope to avoid a like fate. It is understood that the Superintendent of Public Stores started last evening for Washington to see Mr. GUTHRIE on the subject and use his influence with him to adjust the difficulty agreeably to all concerned.

Missionaries for Mendi.

Mr. D. W. BURTON and wife, and Mr. M. MAIR and wife, of the American Missionary Association, and Rev. D. E. FLICKINGER, Dr. W. B. WITT, and Rev. Mr. BILLINGER, of the Board of Missions of the United Brethren in Christ, sailed from New-York Monday, Dec. 1, for Freetown, Sierra Leone, in the ship Thomas Watson.

Mr. BURTON, Mr. MAIR, and their wives, will join the Mendi Mission, West Africa. The others will remain at Freetown until they can make a location more interior.

The American Institute and the Crystal Palace.

The Managers of the American Institute were to have been heard yesterday before the Aldermanic Committee on Lands and Places, with reference to an extension of the lease of the Crystal Palace ground; but as there was not a quorum of the Committee present, the hearing was postponed to Wednesday next.

☞ The steamships Cherokee and Fulton, which formerly ran between New-Orleans, Havana, and New-York—the former of which was burned to the water's edge some time ago—were sold at auction yesterday, at the Merchants' Exchange. It was hoped that the former would bring $25,000, and the latter $25,000, but the Cherokee, which is comparatively useless, was knocked down to Mr. R. C. WEBSTER for $12,000, and the Fulton, a still serviceable vessel, was purchased by Mr. EDWARD LYNCH, for $19,000.

☞ The "dummy" engine on the Hudson River Road, which drags the cars from and to the Thirty-first-street Depot, has been worked once some six weeks. The offense of the road say it works admirably, at a saving of just one-half the expense of horses, besides being much safer. During the last four weeks it has dragged two hundred full freight cars up to the depot.

☞ The question is gravely agitated in authentic circles, whether the baby bonnets that ladies wear now-a-days are becoming over the monster hoops

The Gift of a Constitution.

The Gleaner appears in the Boston Transcript:

"Gov. Walker has had the work translated into French, Mr. Brown has had the work translated into German, and it is said that Mr. Buchanan has translated it into Dutch. Mr. Brown has generously, and offers it to any French journal of Canada, Indeed and Gaul and Cavalry. Up to this moment, there has been difficulty in finding a French publisher. We understand that the Gov. Walker has offered the copyright of the work to any publisher who will undertake the work. We understand that the French copyright of "Dred" has been placed at the disposal of the French publisher, Messrs. Sarrazin, Low, Son & Co. And early in October, before Prof. Brown left England, an arrangement was concluded with a Parisian house. We respectfully ask editors who have copied the item above to notice this correction.

We have no doubt of a favorable reception of "Dred" has met with in Paris, for whether it has been pirated or not, it has at least, we believe, advised the sale of pirated copies to 100,000 copies, with no unabated demand. PHILADELPHIA, SAMPSON & CO.

Affairs in Florida.

Correspondence of the Charleston Mercury.

Major Hartshorne of the Engineer Corps, U. S. Army, has been ordered to take command of the fortifications of this Island, now in progress of construction, has made the necessary arrangements to prosecute the work during the coming Winter with the utmost vigor. Large supplies of provisions and lumber have been sent out from Philadelphia, and the quarters are now occupied, are received, and Fort Taylor, the most important military post in the Gulf, will soon be completed.

The fortifications at Garden Key, Tortugas, known as Fort Jefferson, are being carried on under the command of Capt. Woodbury, U. S. A. A large number of men are employed upon the works, and the works are fast assuming the appearance of a formidable fort, and, collidably with Fort Taylor, protecting the immense commerce of the Gulf of Mexico. These two works give employment to about 300 men, and add much to the business of this place.

Gen. Harney was at Fort Myers, and making preparations to engage at once in active warfare against the Indians.

The dépôt of the army during the war will be in this city, and Major McKinstry, the Quartermaster, is to erect the necessary buildings near the Naval Dépôt.

Emigration to Nicaragua.—The New-Orleans Bulletin contains some cautions addressed to those who meditate emigration to Nicaragua. It says that a large number of the citizens of Louisiana, some of them in good circumstances, are preparing to go thither during the present month, and reminds them that even those who go from the South must expect to pass through the process of acclimation. It adds: "Emigrants, therefore, to Nicaragua, who have slaves, and who intend to till the ground, will, in our opinion, succeed best. Great care, however, will be required to preserve the health of the slaves, especially till the process of acclimation is completed. In regard to white emigrants, all accounts agree in declaring that nothing short of the utmost regularity and absolute temperance in eating and drinking will enable them to withstand the debilitating effects of the tropical heats acting upon the rank vegetation which everywhere abounds. The excesses of Northern latitudes cannot be indulged in with impunity, and those about making up their minds to try their fortunes there should recollect this fact. The right kind of persons for Nicaragua are those possessing strong constitutions, who have been accustomed to exposure, and who can consequently rough it with less danger than those whose habits have been more sedentary, and whose constitutions are more delicate. While the former may with prudence and industry find fortunes, the latter may find graves in a land of strangers, with none to bedew them with the tears of affection."

Singular Death of a Spiritualist.—We have to record the death of a young lady, Miss Harriet Fagan, well known among spiritualist circles, on Tuesday morning at 4 o'clock. The circumstances attending her decease are of a singular nature. Four days prior to the date of her death she was thrown into the trance state, and being controlled by an influence she could not resist, predicted that her own death would occur in two weeks. This prediction she was not informed of. The two weeks expired on Tuesday last. On Monday she appeared in her usual cheerfulness, and at 6 o'clock, while sitting at the tea-table, was again entranced and influenced to draw a casket upon the paper, and also to write immediately beneath it, "All will be revealed in a few hours." Then doubling the paper she gave it to another lady, who carefully kept it from her, as she had concealed the other circumstances, so that she was as unconscious of the last proceeding as she was of the prediction made the two weeks before. She went up stairs immediately after coming out of the trance, disrobed herself and laid down upon the bed. She was taking with violent vomiting and purging, and died, as above stated, at 1 o'clock. She was an estimable lady, much beloved and respected among the friends with whom she was intimate.—Boston Herald.

Sale in Louisville.—Yesterday afternoon our city was swept by a high wind, that for a few moments was almost equal to a tornado. It came from the Southeast uprooting several houses, blowing down a few walls, tearing away awnings, and sweeping every movable thing from its path in a twinkling. The mercury in the barometer had fallen to a lower point than it had reached at any time during the season—a sure indication of rainy and stormy weather. The damage by the high wind was pretty extensive, but not serious as far as we have heard. The Jeffersonville ferry boats were unable to leave the Indiana shore, and did not make a trip till late in the evening. The wind was blowing directly across the River, and a fleet of empty flat-boats at the upper landing were torn from their fastenings and swept to the other side of the River in an incredible short space of time.

The telegraph wires were prostrated in all directions, by the high wind, and we received no dispatches last night.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 9,
THE YEAY-DAY BOOK;
NEW STORIES FOR YOUNG FOLKS. With 100 full-page illustrations. By Fanny Fern. 300 pp., 12mo, cloth. Price, 75 cents; full gilt, $1 25.
Triumphant as has been the success of this favorite American authoress in every department of literature which she has attempted, her genius yet shines with most peculiar lustre in her writings for the young. Here is her forte, and here she stands indisputably at the head of living authors.
"Little Ferns," issued by her a few years since, has already, it is believed, enjoyed a greater sale than any other work of its class; yet the book we now announce well deserves to win a distinct precedence in sale and popularity. It is of a fascinating interest, every page sparkling with the vivacity and grace of its author, and is rich in instruction as well as amusement.
It will be illustrated with ten fine full-page engravings, by Coffin.
As we shall be compelled, by the short time before its publication, to deal out the sheets with a small edition, dealers wishing an early supply will do well to forward their orders at once.
III.
SATURDAY, DEC. 12,
CANTERBURY TALES.
By Harriet Lee. 2 vols. 12mo. cloth. Price, $1 75.
These striking and remarkable novels have long been standards in English literature, and, it is believed, will not fail to be appreciated by American readers. They were favorites of Lord Byron, who wrote: "Nothing of Scott's is finer than 'The German's Tale.' I admired it when a boy, and have continued to like what I did then." The Spectator said: "There is scarcely any educated person of this century who has not shed tears at other, drawn a sincere pleasure from these pages." The Edinburgh Tod said: "Few readers of entertaining literature can be ignorant of these popular productions; and also: "The pure morality which reigns through these tales—which we can scarcely dare to call fictions—will render them the most valuable reading for young persons. They ought to be in every family library."

A new book by the authoress of "Isora's Child."
THE TORCHLIGHT; OR,
THROUGH THE WOOD.
BY HARRIET A. OLCOTT.
One neat 12mo. Price $1 25.
The tale opens with a scene between a lawyer and his landlady, who involves him into an ill-mated marriage with her beautiful daughter—she casting off the lover of her youth for the widower and his money. The reader's interest is soon engrossed in the fortunes of their child,
JEANIE THE WANDERER,
the conflicting circumstances of whose wayward life excite at once the interest and sympathy of the reader. The good and conscientious Aunt Jane, the guardian of our heroine, is truly a pattern of THE TRUE NEW-ENGLAND WOMAN, while the no less natural and life-like character of the Yankee housemaid,
KETURAH SPRUNT,
whose humorous and pointed though homely sayings, and
EBENEZER FLINT,
the lazy, good-for-nothing, just-a-going-to-do-something specimen of humanity—always waiting, like Micawber, for something to turn up—with his ludicrous blunders and unhappy undertakings, keep the reader in a CONSTANT GLOW OF HUMOR AND DELIGHT.
Then, again, the inimitable
RALPH, THE YOUTHFUL LOVER, finds at once a bevy of admirers in young ladies of romantic tastes, while the elder brother, Philip, the NOBLEST ROMAN OF THEM ALL,
is sure to create at least admiration and esteem. The characters of Mrs. Bustlemon, the mother, and Mrs. Miller, the wife, are drawn with great power. The examples of their wasted lives will bear no profitless lesson to AMBITIOUS MOTHERS AND PROUD DAUGHTERS.
The scene changes from the country life of an old New-England home to the metropolis, plantations and bayous of Louisiana, where appears for a brief period the strikingly original character of the quadroon, Lola, who "libe on de spring, sleepe on de spring," and when she die means to "go to heben on de spring."
In conclusion, the publishers confidently assert, that as A STORY OF UNFLAGGING INTEREST,
interspersed with scenes of inimitable humor, and a felicitous and life-like description of City and Country Life, the whole inculcating a moral lesson of great value, no recent novel has surpassed
THE TORCHLIGHT; THROUGH THE WOOD.

FURS, FURS.—A LARGE AND CHOIC

NEW-YORK CITY.

OUR HARBOR.

The Minority report of the Harbor Committee of Common Council, Fifty-Seven, was read, and a lively discussion followed, in which the Mayor and Aldermen participated. The Board then adjourned to meet after the exterior Hall of the Hall of Records, from Chatham-street, to Thirty-Ninth-street, for the purpose of transaction. At eight, the Clerk read the following communication from the Harbor Commissioners in reply to an invitation from the Common Council to meet it in conference:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS, No. 34 BROADWAY, Dec. 1, 1856.

Hon. M. Taylor, Chairman of Committee on Wharves, Docks and Slips, of the Board of Aldermen:

Sir: Your communication, signed by Alderman, of Nov. 29, signed by D. T. Valentine, Esq., Clerk, inviting the Harbor Commissioners to attend the last meeting of the Common Council on Wharves, Docks and Slips, in relation to the subject of the exterior line, at No. 3 Hall, on Tuesday, the 2d day of December, is received.

The Harbor Commissioners respectfully state in reply, that in view of the effect upon the commercial interests of New-York of the proposed extension of the exterior line from Twenty-Second to Thirty-Eighth-street, and the objections of your Committee to the statements made before the Committee on the 21st ultimo, by Hon. Moses H. Grinnell, Chairman of the Board of Commissioners of Pilots, the Harbor would be improved by the proposed extension, the Harbor Commissioners are of opinion that the interests of the City would be better subserved by a further delay of the adoption of the proposed line, than by its adoption at the present time.

The Harbor Commissioners are of opinion that the proposed extension of the exterior line will be a great injury to the commerce of the port and to the interests of the City, by rendering the operation of preserving dock accommodations, in the vicinity of the exterior line, while the enlarged tonnage of the port will require all the water space that can be preserved for navigation. The sectional area of the River through which the main flow at Forty-second-street is less, notwithstanding the greater breadth of the River, than at Fourteenth-street; at the former point it is 10,600 square yards—at the latter 11,000.

This is not, distant when European steamers of large tonnage will be seen passing through Hell Gate. If the Bay shall be filled up as proposed, there will be no suitable anchorage for them.

It is hoped that your Committee will report against the resolution which has passed the Board of Common Council, that the Common Council will defer action until the lines to be recommended by the Harbor Commissioners to the Legislature in January next, shall be determined upon.

By order of the Commissioners,

G. H. SOUGHTON, Secretary.

Mr. Lowrie, who represented the property holders from Twelfth to Seventieth streets, spoke in favor of making East-street seventy feet wide, parallel with Thirty-Ninth-street, the centre line of Fifth-street, thence by a regular deflexure to the Northeast corner of Eighteenth-street and Avenue A, thence by a regular gooseneck to the central line of Thirty-Eighth-street to the present exterior line of the City. Mr. Lowrie urged this proposition to very extended remarks. He said that extending from Blackwell's Island at various points, in this East nearly midway of the stream, were reefs and rocks around which the tides were left, and that the middle of the stream, therefore, was of much less depth than at either side. He said that these deposits were gaining on the New-York side, and lessening on the Brooklyn; so much so that it was no longer safe, and almost impossible for a vessel drawing eighteen or twenty feet of water to ride up the river on the New-York side from Corlear's Hook to Eighteenth-street. The encroachments near the Navy Yard, and the building of a bulkhead to cover the reef at Burnt Mill Point forced the river upon the Brooklyn shore, and deepened it, instead by Williamsburg, and caused it to shoal upon the New-York side.

He gave the history of the plans proposed to obviate this evil, since 1824—none of which have proved successful, and the consequent fears excited; and read the opinions of Professors BACHE, HENRY and Bruce, given in 1856, that the only remedy that would operate to remove the existing shoal, and prevent the formation of others, was to build a sea-wall, or close bulk-head, in line with the current of the river, so as to cause the water to hug the shore of New-York down to Corlear's Hook. He then alluded to the action of the Harbor Commissioners, who, on the 8th of last January, favored the water line now recommended, and a few days thereafter opposed it, and showed the fallacy of their second recommendation. He urged the matter not merely as the representative of property holders, but on the higher ground of its vital importance to the interests of the City. If the line he proposed to the Committee be adopted, the waters of the New-York side of the river would be deepened; while it is very clear that if that which is said to be agreed upon by the Harbor Commissioners prevails, a few years will see this part of the City destroyed, business deserted, and vessels of large tonnage compelled to go to the Brooklyn shore.

Mr. Fox, of the Gas Light Company, concurred in the remarks of Mr. Lowrie.

The Board then adjourned, to report at an early day.

Board of Governors.

The Board of Governors of the Almshouse met at the Rotunda yesterday, the President, SIMMONS TRUMAN, Esq., in the Chair.

A communication was received from M. L. STORRS, asking for the appointment of matron to the Small Pox Hospital. Referred.

Also a communication from WM. O. WEEDS, asking for the entire control and management of the City Cemetery. Referred to a Committee to report at next meeting of the Board.

A communication was read from the Warden of the Almshouse, asking for furniture for the boat house. Referred to Committee on Forries.

CAPTAIN SHARPE—DOCTORS DISSECTING EACH OTHER.

Also, from Dr. THE. EDWARDS, Assistant Physician on Blackwell's Island, complaining of ill treatment from Dr. SAWYER, the resident Physician, and resigning his position. Dr. EDWARDS submitted a long detailed statement of what he conceived to be "unkind and unprofessional" treatment on the part of Dr. SAWYER.

The charge is, quoting the words of Gov. TIEMANN, that Dr. SAWYER is in the habit of transferring patients under his care by means of certificates that are knowingly false, and that it is expected the assistant physicians shall do the same at his bidding. The matter was referred to a committee.

The report of the Committee on Forries was presented and read.

The President then adverted to the matters in dispute and the claim of this Board upon the Commissioners of Emigration. The whole affair, by agreement of both Boards, has been referred to arbitration, Judge Cowen being named. The Attorneys on each side agree to ask for certain returns on which to submit the case. The President produced the document signed by the Attorneys for defendant and plaintiff, and the overseers of outdoor poor were directed to supply the necessary information.

JUDGE CAMPBELL GIVES A RAKING DOWN.

Governor BELL complained strongly of the way in which discharges were effected from these institutions by habeas corpus, also commenting warmly upon the conduct of Judge CAMPBELL.

Governor TIEMANN said a list of such discharges should be published, also the names, and by whom discharged. With this as an amendment, or addition, the following resolution of Gov. BELL was adopted, viz.: "That the commitments and discharges before the Board, with such others of a similar character as may be deemed necessary, be referred to Committee on Penitentiary, with a request that the evils may be remedied resulting from the discharge of prisoners upon grounds that are at variance with justice, even if in accordance with law."

Resolved, also, That the said Committee request, in writing, from each of our Judges, a draft of such a law, or an amendment of existing law as they may deem necessary, to prevent the continuation of the present abuse under execution of the law, and the practical abuse of the writ of habeas corpus.

POLICE OFFICE REFORMED.

The high constables of the police were busy in the Third Ward, up again yesterday at the Police Court for examination. Additional affidavits were made against them. They are a hard looking set, all of them, with the exception of Moses Alias Harris, who their position with great coolness. This Moses wears a stubborn and desperate look, and is evidently distressed at the prospect before him. It will be remembered that he is one of the parties accused of the burglary in Troy some months since. The goods stolen from Troy were traced to his house in Fifty-ninth-street in this City and there recovered. Harris managed to make his escape on that occasion by leaping from a rear window, and was not heard of until his recent arrest in the First Ward. He played his points so well as to elude the vigilant search of those experienced thief-takers, Farley and Borgess, though on one occasion he had a very narrow escape from the grip of the first named officer. At the last arrest he gave the name of Richard Harris, but he was recognized to be no other than the notorious Dick Moore. In Dick's house in Fifty-ninth-street were found papers containing accurate diagrams of many extensive jewelry establishments not only in this City, but also in the cities of Boston, Philadelphia and Baltimore. His street, with that of his friends, will serve these cities from being "cracked." The importance of the arrest can thus be seen.

Nothing but a library was found in possession of the prisoners when taken from their hiding-place in the Beaver-street store, they having, no doubt, thrown their booty away. Had not the attacking party been so strong, the burglars would, no doubt, have made a fearful resistance. As it was, one of them more desperate than the rest, when he heard the police approach drew a revolver, and swore not to surrender alive. His companions remonstrated with him, but he cocked his weapon and stood ready to shoot the first policeman that approached. Not wishing to have a charge of murder as well as burglary to answer for, the other burglars rushed upon their fool-hardy comrade and wrested the pistol from his grasp and threw it away. Being thus disarmed, he took shelter with the rest in the closets where found.

If the "fence" of these men—the scoundrel who receives their spoils—can be broken, there is no doubt as to his infamy—then will a great service have been done.

The burglars of whom we have been speaking were not arrested until a quarter of 12 o'clock Saturday night, and in less than an hour afterwards they were visited by a man residing up town, and a lawyer whom he had engaged to defend them.

The man to whom we allude is not a lawyer, we believe, but what explains his sympathy for the prisoners, and how he came to know of the arrest of the prisoners so very soon after it had taken place?

These things may be explained.

A SNEAK THIEF NABBED AT THE ASTOR HOUSE.

A good-looking young man, about 25 years of age, was nabbed yesterday at the Astor House, while in the act of lifting a coat from one of the boarders' rooms. Mr. Sneak had been hanging about the Astor very suspiciously for a long time. Patrick Devoy, the detective of the House, kept close on him, especially as he recognized him to be the same dead-head who some time before tried to steal a meal in the Ladies' Ordinary, and who, detected in the act, was let off on his promising to keep clear in future. But yesterday he attempted to steal a coat. He had not advanced many steps before he was seized by Mr. Devoy, who took him to the office of the Chief of Police. Here he gave his name as John C. Gilson, but he was recognized by the Police to be a fellow named Lasell. From the Chief's Office he was taken before Justice WELSH, at the Lower Police Court, and committed for trial.

On his person was found a brass chamber-key, of ordinary make and size, to which was attached a brass label marked "20" on either side. The identification of this key may prove important to parties who suffered from thieves of the "sneak" genus. It can be seen with Mr. Devoy, at the Astor.

SUIT FOR SERVICES AS AN EXPERT—JOBSON AGAIN.

David W. Jobson vs. John Allen.—The plaintiff alleges that in the month of April, 1853, he was employed by the defendant to go to Cincinnati, to give evidence in an action pending in the United States Circuit Court, between John Allen and William H. Hunter, for an alleged infringement of a patent for improvements in artificial teeth. Mr. Jobson was called as an expert in the dental business. Previous to this, however, he was employed to make experiments in the manufacture of certain kinds of artificial teeth, in order to give testimony in the above suit. He was also employed to make a report of the trial for publication, for all of which services he demands the sum of fifteen hundred and fifty dollars.

The defendant alleges that the plaintiff came to him soliciting work; that he gave him orders to prepare an abstract of testimony to be used on the trial, for which he agreed to, and did, pay him $100; that the plaintiff came into defendant's laboratory and amused himself in trying experiments, and watching the operations of others; but the defendant denies that he employed the plaintiff to make any experiments on his behalf. He admits that Dr. Jobson was requested to go on to Cincinnati, and did go on and give his testimony, but alleges that he paid all his expenses to that place, and then paid him the sum of $3 31, which he (the defendant) claimed was sufficient compensation.

As to the report of the trial in Cincinnati, the defendant denies that he has ever received the manuscript of the article. On these grounds he denies any indebtedness.

The cause was brought on to trial, and several witnesses examined. It will be continued to-day.

Before Hon. Justice Oakley.

TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS' WORTH OF BRANDY.

Casper Scherf vs. Ann Gillett.—Mr. Scherf hired a house of Ann Gillett, which was situated in Chrystie-street. The house was old, and required some repairing, which Ann promised to attend to. Casper had some wine and brandy, which was bottled and placed in the cellar. One day, when no one was suspecting such a thing, the floor fell in, letting Mr. Casper down among his brandy bottles, and smashing them. In consequence of this, he imagined he was damaged to the amount of $2,000, for which he sued the defendant. The Jury, however, thought that $100 would pay for as much brandy as it was best for him to have.

MARINE COURT—Dec. 2.

Before Judge Thompson.

Dayton, Sprague & Co. vs. The Mayor, &c., of New-York.—This was an action brought by the plaintiffs to recover back $112 paid to the Croton Aqueduct Board, under protest, for extra Croton water used in their rectifying establishment in Front-street. The plaintiffs claimed that the original receipt for water given in May, 1855, was in the nature of a contract, and that, by reason of that receipt, they could be charged no more during the year.

They also claimed that a suit had been prosecuted to recover back another payment made during the year, in which the principle of the suit was involved, and that the Corporation were precluded from showing their defence be this action for that reason.

Mr. Hance, for the Corporation, contended that the plaintiffs had been informed that their bill was rendered, subject to the right of readjustment, if the metre should show they used more water than they had paid for.

The Judge held that it was obvious that the plaintiffs had used the water; that the receipt was not a contract; that the subject matter of this suit was distinct from the subject matter of the former one; that the money had been voluntarily paid under a claim of right, and could not be recovered back.

Judgment for defendants.

For plaintiffs, Mr. Davinger; for defendants, Mr. Wilcoxon.

COURT OF [illegible]

Before Hon. Judge Campbell.

Yesterday morning the following [illegible] were impannelled in this Court to Grand Jury:

The Grand Jury having been sworn, the City Judge proceeded to deliver his charge; after which, the Jury having retired to their room, Margaret [illegible] was put on a charge of petit larceny, and acquitted.

Archibald McArthur, indicted for robbery in the first degree, in stealing, on Nov. 18, a watch and chain, valued at $75, the property of Peter M. Bassett, pleaded guilty to petit larceny, and was sentenced to one year in the Penitentiary.

The Court then adjourned till this morning, at 11 o'clock.

LONG ISLAND.

Brooklyn Institute.

The Brooklyn Institute is a good deal more of an institution than is generally suspected. It seems to have no private or selfish ends to attain—no schemes for personal aggrandisement. It was founded and established by individual benevolence, and it divides no dividends, excepting those of public utility. Its most important feature is the large and well-selected Library now open at the Institute, free to the youths of the city. The Library is also free to all members of the Institute. And the rapidly increasing number of readers, demands an enlargement of the Library, and for this purpose donations of money or books are solicited by the Directors.

Weekly meetings are held of the NATURAL HISTORY DEPARTMENT, in the Director's Room at the Institute. Specimens of Natural History, often rare and curious, are exhibited, accompanied with explanatory remarks or essays. Tuesday and Friday evenings of each week, during the Winter, are devoted to CLASSES IN DRAWING. Scholars are admitted at a merely nominal price; and it is hoped that the funds applied to this purpose will, before long, enable the Committee to open the classes free of charge. To young readers of the Library, and to all members of the Institute, a course of SCIENTIFIC LECTURES, WITH EXPERIMENTS, is given during the Winter, entirely free.

A second course of free lectures on Sabbath evenings, on the "Power, Wisdom and Goodness of God, as manifested in his works," is now preparing by Prof. HAYMANSON, of Cambridge University, and will be delivered the present or ensuing season, at the Institute. The first course was delivered by Rev. R. S. STORRS, of Brooklyn; and is now in process of publication. The Institute has a fund, the proceeds of which are to be annually applied to the purchase of Works of Art, by American artists. By this means, a gallery of paintings will be secured, open and free to the public. Several paintings are already on exhibition there.

The payment of $3 constitutes a person a member for one year, and gives to that person all the privileges of the Institute, and entitles him, together with two ladies, or two minors, to admission to the Annual Course of Lectures given during the Winter.

From twelve to fourteen lectures are given in this course. It will be seen, therefore, that for $3 three persons may attend fourteen Lectures.

Elihu Burritt on the Union.

Last evening, despite of the rain, about 200 persons assembled at the Institute, Brooklyn, to hear from ELIHU BURRITT an exposition of his views as to the "importance of the Union and the only means of its preservation."

In very polished, but not too florid, though elaborate diction, Mr. BURRITT developed his plan, which is substantially as follows:

Indemnification to the slaveholders ought to be a national act, of which the Free States should bear their proportion of cost. The silent operation of moral causes might effect gradual abolition in less than half a century; but this great nation cannot afford for that period to nurse at its heart a paralyzing dog. Better pay the interest of millions of dollars, if only to remove the curse which, because labor is the condition of the slave, now degrades even Free labor. He would buy off Slavery at once, foreclose the lease. America, in justice to the rest of the world that might need her sympathizing interference, could not afford to hug Slavery for another five and twenty years.

In fine, he would devote the public lands to the redemption of the slaves. He estimated slaves as worth on an average $250 per head. Now, there were sixteen hundred millions of acres of public land, that at seventy-five cents per acre would produce twelve hundred millions of dollars. The three and a half millions of slaves might be emancipated for eight hundred and seventy-five millions, which would leave a large surplus for their future education and elevation.

Such is the amiable scheme. Mr. BURRITT thought the pretence that there is practically and really any existing Union quite a sham, while North and South are arrayed against each other in more bitter hatred and hostility than any two European nations. Nothing but the downfall of Slavery as an institution could inaugurate the freedom for which our forefathers fought; but which they had by no means fully secured.

At the conclusion of the Lecture, which was neither long nor tedious, Mr. Lewis TAPPAN asked permission to say a few words. He showed that slaves were worth nearer $1,200 each than $250—and that it was simplicity to expect the South would tax themselves with half the expense of the proposed outlay. They would accept of no pecuniary compensation for the political influence Slavery gives them nor for the possession of the persons of 1,500,000 women. If the people of the North would only vote right, Slavery would immediately come to a peaceful end. In Antigua, where emancipation first took place, after the proposal that the slaveholders should have four years to think of it—the Governor came down and said, "this is inevitable. I have opposed it, but now I shall submit." So said others, and the thing was instantly effected. Some American captains slipped their cables and fled, apprehensive of disturbance. But there was none. And so, the moment the North feel right, and go to the ballot-box with unanimity, the South will follow the example of the incensed Governor and council of Antigua. Mr. TAPPAN highly complimented Mr. BURRITT for the benevolence of his sentiments, and with that interchange of acknowledgments the meeting terminated.

Brooklyn Board of Education.

The regular monthly meeting of this Board was held yesterday afternoon. Considerable routine business was transacted.

A resolution was adopted directing application to be made to change the School Law so that the Superintendent of Public Schools would not be compelled to act as Secretary of the Board. The labors of the Superintendent are so arduous that it is deemed expedient to do the duty now assigned him.

☞ Mr. R. D. KIMBALL delivered a lecture last night in the Brooklyn Athenæum on "Lectures and Lecturers, Ancient and Modern," in the course of which he traced the origin, progress, prevalence and power of the art of oral communication, from the earliest times to the present.

Burglars Captured—Almost.

On Monday last Sergt. HYDE of the Fourth District Police, Brooklyn, discovered a quantity of hardware in a hole on a vacant lot off Portland-avenue, near Myrtle, which he supposed had been stolen, and accordingly kept watch with a sufficient force. That night a party of seven men came to take the property away, when they were arrested and were committed to the Cells.

The accused were yesterday brought before Justice MORNEHOUSE, when it was made to appear that the property had not been stolen but belonged to a firm of builders; the partners had some dispute, and one of them had concealed it where found until their difficulties were settled. The employes of the Company seized upon the property to secure what was owing them, and were the parties arrested. They were all discharged.

Brooklyn City Court.

Before Judge Culver.

This Court was opened at 10 o'clock, when the following Grand Jury was impanneled:

EMMOT K. VAN BUREN, Foreman.

Wm. C. Booth,	Jos. J. Eiseman,
S. Bedell,	E. D. Frynton,
John Whittlesey,	J. N. Davidson,

Patrick O'Neil,	Philander Hall,
James Freeland,	Michael Zimmer,
Edward Ord,	Andrew Stockholm,

☞ JOHN B. GOUGH lectured last evening on his subject, in the Clinton-avenue Church.

STATIONERY.

TO ALL MEN WHO DO WRITE!
THE WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN.
MERCHANTS, ACCOUNTANTS, and business men of every class, if you desire a permanent relief from bad, poor or indifferent pens, buy without delay the
WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN.
It is none of your "gold-pointed," or "diamond-pointed," or "gutta-percha," or "India-rubber," or "platinum-tipped," or "amalgamated," or "electro-," or "anti-corrosive," or "double-back-action," or "never-failing-fountain-of-ink" pen—which are all humbugging phrases, designed to deceive—but it is an AMERICAN MADE STEEL PEN, manufactured in 27th-st., in the City of New-York, AND IS THE ONLY STEEL PEN MANUFACTURED IN AMERICA.
It is an improvement on all pens ever made before—its shape and devices are patented, and it is beyond all question the best pen in the world, and will write beautifully, even when thickly coated with dry ink.
Those who have from early habit adhered to the quill, for its softness, can now drop their "feathers" and "steel switch away"—to their great relief from frequent "pen-making" and "pen-mending"—by using the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN, which is the ONLY true and perfect substitute for the "elastic old quill" that scientific experiments have ever produced. Mark that, ye knights of the quill! And American science and American artisans have achieved the victory.
Those who have accustomed their hands to the use of gold pens, and find it impossible to procure two alike, or one that does not get bent or lose a point now and then, will find in the WASHINGTON MEDALLION PEN a pen that is ever-pointed, and possesses, as a purely scientific result of its conformation, all the ease or softness of the most perfect gold pens, and greater certainty of character—more regular stability. The gold pen can never be perfectly duplicated. THE WASHINGTON MEDALLION Pens are uniform in quality and action.
Those who have tested it by a little Japan varnish into the use of stiff bits of steel, under the impression that they were "India Rubber" or "Gutta Percha Pens," and therefore would not corrode, are hereby informed that there has never been a single pen made of those materials, and never will be, for reasons that must be apparent to every man of common sense who will give the scientific structure of a pen a minute's consideration.
Reader, beware of all Japan varnish! Bear this in mind—that this country pays England and France ONE MILLION OF DOLLARS ANNUALLY FOR STEEL PENS—poor or worthless pens at that. And now, in the language of a distinguished economist, "LET AMERICAN CHILDREN LEARN THE ART OF WRITING AND AMERICAN LADIES BE WRITTEN—AND AMERICAN COMMERCIAL RECORDS AND ALL THE VAST BUSINESS OF THIS COUNTRY BE RECORDED WITH AMERICAN-MADE PENS."
For sale at the Manufacturing Company's prices by Messrs. MARKS, BUTTRICK & CO., No. 93 Chambers-st.;
Messrs. AMES, HERRICK, BARNES & RHODES, No. 75 John-st.;
Messrs. GRAY, COOK & MERRIT, No. 18 Beekman-st.
And by all the first-class Retail Stationers in the City and to Jobbers at the Office of the Company, No. 208 Broadway.

DENTISTRY.

CONTINUOUS GUM ENGLISH.—THE SUIT lately pending against me in the Superior Court, for an infringement of the patent of ALLEN'S Continuous Gum Teeth, having been decided in my favor, I am now prepared to manufacture full or partial sets of my improved Continuous Gum Teeth, on the improved atmospheric pressure plates, which are superior in every respect to the old, and which can be inserted with no shock whatever. In the whole, Persons in want of artificial teeth can save 50 per cent. by calling at my office, where specimens of all the new styles of Dentistry can be seen. Having every facility, I am now prepared to manufacture for the profession, or give instructions in the art. I have recently discovered a new process of benumbing the gums for the extraction of teeth, and which can be used in all cases, with the slightest pain to the patient. It is entirely different from the process of freezing the gums, which can only be used in few cases, and generally produces more pain than the extraction of the tooth.

MEDICAL AND SURGICAL.

[illegible] SANDS' SARSAPARILLA and Manhattan Vermifuge. Operation perfect, the cure of disease, and the cause it follows [illegible]
Prepared and sold by A. B. & D. SANDS, Druggists, No. 100 Fulton-st., New-York.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERY OF THE AGE.—DR. KENNEDY, of Rochester, has discovered in one of our common native weeds a remedy that cures every kind of humor, from the worst scrofula down to a simple pimple.
He has tried it in over 1,000 cases, and never failed, except in two cases, both of the worst humor. He has now in his possession over 200 certificates of its virtues, all within an hour's ride of this city.
Two bottles are warranted to cure a humor of any kind.
One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two to three bottles will clear the system of boils.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst tetter in the mouth or stomach.
Three bottles are warranted to cure the worst case of erysipelas.
One to two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the eyes and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running ulcers.
One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two to three bottles are warranted to cure the worst case of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the salt rheum.
Five to six bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.
Reader, I publish over a thousand books of this in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. Some in water with extraordinary fire, so sure will the cure follow. I never sold a bottle of it but that sold another; after a trial, it always speaks for itself. There are two things about this that seem to me surprising—first, that it grows in our pastures, in some places quite plentiful, and yet its value has never been known until I discovered it in 1846; second, that it should cure all kinds of humor.
In order to give some idea of the sudden rise and great popularity of the discovery, I will state that in April, 1853, I sold it at cost and about six bottles per day. In April, 1854, I sold over a thousand bottles per day.
No change of diet ever necessary—eat the best you can get, and enough of it.
DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one table spoonful per day; children over 6 years, dessert spoonful; children from 3 to 6 years, tea-spoonful. As no direction can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day.
N. B. KENNEDY gives personal attendance in half cases of Scrofula.

RICORD'S PRACTICE.—DR. HAMMOND would inform the public that he may be consulted, confidentially, on all those important diseases which constitute his specialty, at his rooms No. 416 Broadway, opposite the St. Nicholas. Dr. H. is an ex-pupil of Dr. Carnochan and Prof. of the City Hospital, in order to perfect himself in this branch of Medicine, removed to Paris in 1846, where he studied four years in the celebrated Hospital du Midi, under Ricord himself, who is the first living surgeon in diseases of the genito-urinary organs. Returning to this city in 1850 he established "Ricord's Practice," a method of treatment which, from rapidity of cure and permanent safety to the constitution, has revolutionized medical science, in this class of maladies. Dr. HAMMOND'S success for the last six years has been unparalleled, so much so that numerous imitators have sprung up, who are as ignorant of medicine generally as they are of this important branch of it. Consultations in English or French, personally or by letter. In all 1 o'clock, and from 5 to 7 evenings. C. D. HAMMOND, M. D.

PRIVATE CONSULTATIONS.—DR. WATSON has for a long series of years confined his attention to diseases of a certain class, in which he has treated not less than twenty thousand cases, without an instance of failure. The remedies are mild, and do not keep the patient from business, or expose him to detection. An immediate application should always be made; but if the disease has lain concealed in the system, or has spread by injudicious treatment, the undersigned knows himself especially competent to treat such cases, by a method at once safe, speedy and efficacious. Dr. WATSON is in constant attendance from 7 in the morning until 9 at night, at his consulting rooms and residence, No. 55 Walker-st., a few doors west of Broadway. W. WATSON, M. D.,
Formerly Surgeon to the Lock Hospital.

If only. This becomes the patient from secondary attacks, and is the only remedy on earth that does it. Try all others and see. Beware of a handbill stating Dr. Hunter has removed. It is a villainous deception. Consultation private. Rock grate.

[illegible] did not know to which of his speeches Mr. Brown alluded, but what he had said on the subject of Slavery had not been said in a corner. He [illegible] reference was made to a speech he made in [illegible], in favor of the election of Zachariah Chandler, a stalwart, to the office of President. But, whatever Mr. Brown referred to that speech or not, he would remark that his speeches had been published together and published in three volumes by Mr. Dayton, of New-York, and the Senator could find his opinions expressed there fully. So far as he was concerned, he was willing these issues imperfectly [illegible] now should be left open until 1860 for the decision of the people.

Mr. Brown said constant agitation upon the subject of Slavery had brought the people of the South to the conviction that the perpetuation of that institution was necessary for their peace and safety alone. As one of the representatives of the South, he desired to say he took no further interest in it, or in any opinion which was entertained at the North in relation to it, than as he entertained the firm and decided hope that there was a public sentiment yet remaining at the North which was ready to unite with the South in the desire to perpetuate the Union, and by the aid of that public sentiment in the North, he believed the Union would be preserved; but further than that, as a Democrat, or as one responding for the people of the Southern States, where that institution exists, he [illegible] the public sentiment at the North was to him a matter of indifference, whether they were there to continue the Slavery agitation [illegible] their powers to interfering with the institution existing in the United States, or enforce the prevention of legislative expansion. He was willing to be bound by the Constitution as it was, and to regard it as a sacred instrument, and if not duly protected by the duty being imposed on the Government to render fugitives up to their masters, yet was the element of political power in representation. That being so, the people where it existed had the same right to the legitimate expansion that they had to its peaceable enjoyment within their own borders. To endeavor to restrict this expansion was to touch upon their rights in violation of the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. Wright stated that he had never entertained nor expressed the opinion that Congress had the power to exclude Slavery within the States, nor had he ever stated the sentiment that those with whom he acted were disposed to assume or exercise such power. He had read Mr. Sumner's book, but dissented from its conclusion. There was a small number of people in the free States who coincided with Mr. Sumner in opinion, and they had voted for Gerrit Smith for President. He was sorry that gentleman received, he could not tell; but probably not over two thousand in all the Free States. The positions assumed by the supporters of Col. Fremont were entirely different.

Mr. Brown contended it was not the duty of the South to endure patiently the aggressions of the North. Though long-forbearing, and unwilling to do anything to sever the Union of these States, yet there came a point where forbearance ceased to be a virtue, and became the self-respect required them to defend and maintain their rights.

Mr. Trumbull remarked that when Senators said that he and his friends wished to interfere with the rights of the States, they imputed to them what to Whigs had emphatically declared their opposition. He was pleased with remarks as they had listened to from the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Brown, that were alienating one section of the Union from the other. Did the Senator wish the North to interfere with the institutions of the South, and to fasten on the Northern people sentiments which they disavow everywhere and on all occasions? This message contains a most unwarrantable assertion as to this fact, for the President undertook to say that the Missouri Act of 1820 was passed in violation of the Constitution. Where did he get the authority for the assertion? The Supreme Court of the United States declared with regard to the Ordinance of 1787. The Federal and State Governments combined.

Mr. Gwin [illegible] never heard of it.

Mr. Trumbull sent for the first volume of Peters' Report, and read from page 546, in the opinion pronounced by Judge Marshall, in the case of the American Insurance Company vs. Canter, the sentence, "In legislating for them (the Territories) Congress exercises the combined power of the General and State Governments."

Mr. Gwin remarked, it assumed no power.

Mr. Trumbull inquired whether there were not authentic records threats to keep Slavery out of the Territories.

Mr. Gwin responded, no, unless the power was found in the Constitution.

Mr. Trumbull insisted that the power was broad and unqualified. Congress formerly exercised it, and it was a new discovery to say that Congress did not possess it now. In alluding to a remark of Mr. Mason, that if the Republican Party had executed what they avowed, it would lead to a dissolution of the Union, he stated, and stated, Mr. Trumbull said the Republicans had avowed no principles excepting those declared by Jefferson, Washington and Monroe. Was it any cause for a dissolution of the Union that any particular man was elected President? The Senator from Virginia did not contend for that. Neither Mr. Buchanan nor any other person could be elected, except in a constitutional mode, and if so elected would it be cause for dissolution of the Union? If so, the Constitution contained within itself the elements of destruction. It was a baseless assumption of the President and of Senators to attribute to the great Republican Party hostility to rights of the States, or toleration of Slavery in any State, though they desired the right of Congress to prohibit Slavery in territory of the United States.

Without the question being taken on printing, the Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Dec. 1.

The House was engaged all the session on the subject of Whitfield's admission, and adjourned, without disposing of the question.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Dec. 1, 1857.

The session opened heavily in the House, to-day, with the renewal of the Kansas contest, in the case of John W. Whitfield. The news was one of considerable interest, and participated in by a larger number of members than any other business to be present at the commencement of the closing session of a Congress. The call of the House showed one hundred and [illegible] members present; but the vote on Whitfield was only one hundred and one, besides those who were known to be about the building, but who were evidently absent when the vote was taken.

The result of to-day's debate was general. The Republicans, both from the Presidential contest, in which they were beaten, though not broken, came up [illegible] the one man, and pleased him the battle again to-day on the first opportunity, with an energy and spirit as remarkable as it is commendable.

Mr. Grow, of Pennsylvania, who, as Chairman of the Committee on Territories, was the General of the forces to-day, placed his objections to Whitfield's admission boldly upon the ground that he had not been elected under any valid law, and in a brief and forcible speech established the fact that his present claims were precisely those rejected by the House at the last session.

The result, of course, you already know.

John Scott Harrison was absent from his seat to-day when the vote was taken, which gave him the opportunity to announce to the House, with a peculiar emphasis, that had he been present he would have voted for Whitfield's admission. I regret to say that the friends of Kansas were defeated upon the question of adjournment after a session of seven hours, in consequence of the unavoidable absence of some of our own friends. It is to be hoped that there will be a reform in this respect, and that members will bear in mind that a little personal inconvenience is of less consequence than the interests of Kansas and the country.

Among the new members sworn in to-day, is Mr. J. L. D. Morrison, who was elected from the Alton district of Illinois, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the election of Judge Trumbull to the Senate of the United States. Morrison is an old Whig, and ran for Lieutenant-Governor on the Whig ticket in 1852. In 1854 he was elected to the State Senate as an Anti-Nebraska man, and offered a resolution in the Legislature instructing Douglas to vote for the restoration of the Missouri Compromise. At the late election he was taken up as a Simon Pure Nebraska Democrat, and elected by a combination of Buchanan and Fillmore men. Whether he is possessed of so much versatility of talent as he thus proves himself to possess of political principle, remains to be seen.

The lobby members swarm about the Capitol to-day in great numbers, a certain sign of busy legislation in future, and fine chances for pickings. This system of lobbying has grown beyond all precedent of late years, until it is become a crying evil and a burning disgrace. There positively is no more effectual method of breaking it up than that of concentrating public opinion against every man and every measure for whom or in behalf of which these chaffers are employed. Of course a distinction ought to be drawn between professional Attorneys—who, in the regular pursuit of a regular business, employ fair and honest means to accomplish honest aims—and the highway robbers of every grade who practice the "stand-and-deliver" game upon everybody who is so unfortunate as to need the interposition of Congress. How to reach the lobbyists who fill members' seats, is a different matter. It is doubtful whether a reform can be effected there except by direct exposure as often as shall seem necessary.

Hon. J. W. Denver, Representative from California, returned from Ohio a day or two since, bringing with him a bride from the Buckeye State. Mr. Denver is a native of Ohio, from which State he emigrated to California, whose interests in Congress he has served with eminent fidelity, ability and zeal.

The following members of Congress have also taken rooms at the National Hotel: Senators James, of Rhode Island, and Pratt, of Maryland; and Representatives Campbell and Barclay, of Pennsylvania, Mott, of Ohio, Bowie, of Maryland, and McCarty, of New-York. S.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Farmers' Club—American Institute.

This Association met on Tuesday, at the Institute in Broadway—Judge Livingstown in the Chair.

The Secretary presented some interesting selections from the Journal de la Société Impériale et Central d'Horticulture, of Paris. The current number for September contains some references to the apple tree, by M. Sailleie, who observes:

"Some facts noticed in Normandy, since the attack of our apple trees by disease, seem to corroborate the opinion as to the malady of the grape vine. Apple trees and pear trees were attacked by a small insect called the cheruc, which seemed to have cured the malady by piercing the bark. But there is nothing to justify this notion. In the opinion of M. Brebon, there occurs a sort of degeneracy, which no direct experiments can prove exerts a fundamental influence, which no human power can prevent or arrest—the cause, perhaps, in part, by perturbations in the seasons and meteorological phenomena, which have coincided exactly with the attack of the malady of each year of its occurrence."

This reminds us, observed Judge Meigs, of the remarkable falling off of some of our best apples, viz., the Baldwin and others mentioned by Dr. Wheelbrow at a recent meeting of the Farmers' Club, as well as of the wonderful effects on plants, especially potatoes, since the equally mysterious action of Asiatic cholera on men almost everywhere, of all climates, manners and races.

Sugar Sorghum and Discorea Batatas.

"These new plants," (quoting the above-named European journal,) "are about to play the greatest part in our agriculture, the latter furnishing a new element to replace the potatoe, and the first, a great number of highly useful purposes. They possess precious qualities. The seed is excellent for poultry, the skin of the seed gives a valuable dye, the flour is excellent and very delicate, and it is useful in medicine, internally and externally. It is almost as good as oats, and in that alone it pays the cost of the crop. The panicles, when the seeds are off, are useful as well as the roots for fuel. The stalk yields syrup, sugar, wine, brandy, vinegar, alcohol. The maturity of the plant is shown when the seeds change from a deep yellow color to red. The stalks, chopped into small cross-sections and boiled in water, form good marmalade. This may then be pressed to get out the juice, which is put over the fire while boiling. A little lime, or any alkaline solution, is occasionally thrown in to purify it, a scum rising incessantly. The juice is finally clarified by albumen. Fourteen eggs are sufficient for 140 pounds of juice. Lime, in powder, of about three-quarters of a pound in weight, is sufficient for 140 pounds of juice. When this is over, put the juice into earthen vases, and set them where they shall not be exposed to humidity or to heat. Thus every farmer and gardener can have his syrup, and, if he chooses to make it, his own sugar."

Judge Meigs observed that these plants form an admirable food, in their natural form, for stock. Truly, said he, the plant is a magnificent acquisition to our country.

One of the tubers was boiled, (or unfortunately—hardly sufficiently boiled) and presented in transverse slices to the members of the club. It tastes somewhat like the yam, or like a half-boiled watery ordinary potatoe. A member said the taste reminded him of the "horse potatoe," "long potatoe" or "merino potato," that in his youth the farmers were in the habit of boiling for cattle.

After several other interesting subjects had been alluded to by the Secretary, in quotation from the French journals, the question of the day was taken up, "Orchards."

Cultivating Fruit Trees.

Professor Mapes having spoken at some length,

Mr. Solon Robinson said: The great failure is in planting the trees. With careful planting a world of fruit might be produced. He would like to buy pears for less than a shilling each. The price might be reduced easily to two cents with profit to the cultivator, nor would the market be glutted with fruit. The public were sadly indifferent to the matter.

Prof. Mapes said that walking up Broadway, pears from France were chiefly to be seen, and they were nearly as expensive in Paris as when brought here. There was no reason why we should not cultivate pears quite as well as the French. It will not take long to know what good cultivation will do for the pear tree.

He then referred to an assumed fact, that earthy salts and minerals which have already passed through the bodies of animals, are more valuable as manure than other salts and minerals isometrically and chemically the same. Parian marble and English chalk are both (chemically speaking) equally pure carbonates of lime. Sulphate of magnesia, made out of the magnesian Hoboken stone and sulphuric acid, is a very different thing in its effects, and yet chemically the same after repeated crystallization. As high a point in organic nature as possible is the best for the selection of inorganic material for manure. The condition for appropriation that is best is that in which lime is taken from bones rather than from the rock. Chemically they are identical, yet their condition is different. The plant cannot bite and take up lime directly brought from the rock, but it can when it has passed through and is presented in animal bone. There are but sixty odd primates, the new functions arising out of their combination are distinct from the character of the functions of primary or elemental bodies. In passing through animal bodies, as part of themselves and not as secreta, mineral materials acquire a modification which renders them better fitted for similar and further use. In answer to an inquiry from a member, Professor Mapes said it was possible that a change or diversity in the form, (not of the crystal,) but of the ultimate atom, or, at least, a change or diversity purely physical, though not chemical in the ultimate atom, might account for or be inseparable from the diversity in the obvious effect of the application of the two when employed as manure.

The subject then dropped.

Rev. Ely Coswin, of San José, Cal., Recording Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, exhibited a pear of a species called the "Pound Pear," grown by E. L. Beard, Esq., of San José Mission, weighing 2¼ pounds; girth, 14¼ inches; circumference, longitudinally, 21¼ inches.

Mr. Wheeler, of Sacramento, sent also a pear, dimensions, 15¾ by 19 inches; weight, 25¾; omitted; exhibited by E. Max Wheeler, Esq., of Hiland Terrace, New-York.

The Association adjourned to Tuesday, the 16th inst., when the subject alluded to by Prof. Mapes will be again taken up and examined, as a great natural and well-recognized law.

New-York Horticultural Society.

The Horticultural Society met on Monday evening in room No. 19 Clinton Hall, the President, John Gardiner, Esq., in the chair. About twenty persons were present. In the absence of gas or chandeliers, the room was exceedingly illuminated by four tallow dips stuck in the necks of empty pint ink bottles. On one of the two tables were specimens of "Cypripedium insigne," "Cuffia roulens," a very pretty Erica in flower—"Bravardia bicolor," "Epiphyllum Violacea superba," "Agapanthus umbellatus," a lovely little thing, "Lichenstilla formosa," and a seedling of Begonia, which cannot fail to be highly interesting to the physiological botanist, or to the student of vitality in any of its forms. Greene of the leaves of this plant a hole has by some accident been torn, and from one point of the ragged edge young plants (not a cluster) are evidently forming. It is important to the florist, too, as it demonstrates that the plant can be propagated, even from portions of its leaves, and this even after being accidentally or intentionally detached from the parent stem. This specimen is exhibited by Messrs. Ghanzrouni.

The Minutes were read, and the following gentlemen were elected almost unanimously as the officers for the ensuing year:

Robberies Up Town.

A correspondent sends us the following:

Observing in your valuable paper notice of robberies in this and the neighboring cities which may be useful in putting persons on their guard, I would beg leave to call to your notice that several robberies have been committed in the upper part of the City, which the Police are silent about. Amongst them are the following, from each of which were stolen quantities of clothing, plate, &c., &c.: say Mr. Hendrickson's, Waverley-place; Mr. O'Reilly's, Ninth-st.; Mr. Morrock's, Fourteenth-street; Mrs. Rose's, Twelfth-street.

Found Dead.

The body of an unknown man was found floating in the water at the foot of Warren-street yesterday. An inquest was held on it by Coroner Hills. Verdict: "Death from some unknown cause; supposed drowning."

Deceased was about 25 years of age, 5 feet 10 inches in height, and was dressed in black, with patent leather boots. A watch, a porte-monnaie, and other articles were found on his person.

Child Burned to Death.

Yesterday morning, a little girl two years of age, named Mary Flock, was burned to death during the absence of her mother for, but few minutes. The child sat down before the stove, her clothes took fire, and she was burned to death when her mother returned. The family reside in Golden-street.

Receipts of Taxes.—The amount of Taxes received the past week by Mr. Howard, was:

Monday, Nov. 24	$166,000 00
Tuesday, Nov. 25	205,000 00
Wednesday, Nov. 26	250,000 00
Thursday, Nov. 27	237,000 00
Friday, Nov. 28	326,949 59
Saturday, Nov. 29	767,289 53
Total for the week	$1,952,239 05

The large amount on Saturday is accounted for by reason of 1 per cent. being added on and after 1st December. It is less than last year, however, for $900,000 were taken on that day.

☞ Mrs. Donaldson, the aged lady, who was run over by a stage on the corner of Broadway and Grand-street, on the 26th ult., is not expected to survive her injuries. Her friends are very anxious to ascertain where the blame of the accident lies, and with this view are advertising for persons who witnessed it.

The Groans of the Wounded.—It is amusing to hear the outcry of the venders of the various counterfeit London Gins against R. R. Messrrs & Co., who are admitted to sell only the pure, unadulterated London Cordial article to be found in this market. The "cries of the vanquished" are, in truth, most piteous; but it will not answer for broken-down policy-venders to fall back upon their respectability,—the public are too intelligent. It will not do for men who never import anything to affect a dignified silence when arraigned for their impositions; the trick is stale. Nor yet will it avail much for men whose trash is grossly adulterated in Holland, to insist on its purity here. The Ten Governors have expressed them. Pure London Cordial Gin is the only safe, wholesome, unobjectionable beverage you can drink, instead of the noxious mixtures of the day, and it is to be had only of R. R. Messrrs & Co., No. 36 Fulton-street, in pint and quart bottles, at 50 cents and $1 each, with their names on the same, and of respectable druggists.

Tuesday, Dec. 2—P. M.

The Annual Message of the President of the United States, communicated to Congress to-day, states the Revenues of the Government from all sources for the past fiscal year, ending June 30, 1857, at.....$79,018,141
And the Expenditures.....60,178,948

Surplus means.....$18,745,193
The Public Debt, March 4, 1853.....$69,129,987
Subsequently added for Taxes.....2,756,000

Together.....$71,879,987
Paid off since 4th March, 1853.....41,142,808

Leaving present debt only.....$30,737,199

Of the Revenues of the year over sixty-four millions were derived from Custom Duties. Of the Expenditures three millions were paid to Mexico, under the Gadsden treaty. The premiums paid to the holders of the Public Debt to induce its surrender before maturity, amount since the 4th March, 1853, to $4,882,511; raising the cost of redeeming the Public Debt, principal and premium, to the total sum of $45,525,319, out of the surplus revenue of the present Administration; leaving an undrawn balance in the Treasury at the close of the month of November, $22,304,494.

The Stock Exchange continues to advance, and the general market acquires additional strength as we approach the close of the year, and the position of the Bank movement and the Foreign Exchanges grows better. The outside public afford the main support to prices, though we discover a more equal division in the jobbing operations of the members of the Board of Brokers than obtained earlier in the season. The Bears, for the moment at least, have lost control of the greater part of the list, and the Bulls in the Western Road shares and New-York Central and Reading are moving with better confidence than usual. New-York and Erie shares and Illinois Central Bonds are also firm, under a steady though not particularly marked demand. The feature of the day was a rise of 3@3¾ ⅌ cent. in Chicago and Rock Island, and 1¾ ⅌ cent. in New-York Central. The former touched 101¾, and the latter 90¾, cash. There was a private sale of 2,000 shares of Central early in the day at 90 ⅌ cent. The market closed buoyant.

The main business in Exchange, for the Northern, sailing from Boston to-morrow, appears to have been done yesterday. The Rothschilds' agent supplied £70,000 or £80,000 Sterling at 109 ⅌ cent., and although the bankers rate was subsequently quoted at 109¾@109¾ ⅌ cent., there was not much done for ready money, and just before the closing of the mail to-day some considerable sums of first-class bills were taken at 109@109¾ ⅌ cent. The extreme closing rates we call 109¾@110¼ ⅌ cent. Francs were a little stiffer, 5.[illegible]@5.[illegible]. The amount of Gold sent to Boston by express this evening for shipment is only $212,168. The Money Market works easy, though Discounts outside of Bank still rate 1¾@2 ⅌ cent. for prime and fair lists of paper above the legal rate. The Stock brokers are not heavy borrowers, and the leading houses in the business are supplied at 7 ⅌ cent. The Sub-Treasury received to-day $263,596, paid out $261,778, and held at the close a balance of $11,956,544.

Mr. J. L. Douglass, recently of the Gas Regulator Company, has been made Secretary of the Merchants' Insurance Company, in place of Mr. Savage, made President of the new Fire Insurance Company in Jersey City.

The rise in Chicago and Rock Island shares is the result, we presume, of recent steps taken by certain influential stockholders to have a good part of the surplus earnings to 1st January next capitalized or otherwise divided, in order to enable parties to convert on the 10th of that month of a large share of the Convertible Mortgage Bonds of the Company. The story of the affairs of the concern is a brief and plain one. The Stock is $3,000,000, the Funded Debt $2,000,000. The former pays 5 ⅌ cent. half yearly, in April and October; the latter 8¾ ⅌ cent., on 10th July and 10th January. The net earnings of the Road the present year have so far run ahead of these dividend and interest charges as to have left over 12¾ ⅌ cent. surplus on the Stock, after the payment of the July interest and October dividend, which surplus will be increased to over 20 ⅌ cent. by January, by the subsequent traffic, or say $851,905, as per memorandum below. On the 10th January the half-yearly interest on the Convertible Debt falls due, and on that day the right of conversion could be availed of, after the payment of the coupon, and the new stock thereby created come in for a full participation in the surplus earnings, unless previously divided, in whole or in part, to the old stockholders, in the shape of an extra stock or cash dividend. The precise steps taken on the subject have not transpired. The opposition of a portion of the Directors having been intimated, notice was prepared for a general meeting of the stockholders early in January, but whether already actually published or waived until the Board of Directors can have time to act formally on the subject, we are not advised.
